What Kind of Appeal?

(From the Oregonian.)

It is useless to offer council to a people who are on a run or stampede, like a herd of buffaloes. Who will run till its instinctive motive has been exhausted. And a false alarm will start a herd of buffaloes on a stampede, just as effectively as a real alarm.

The Oregonian has been urged to say to men and women who have money in the banks, most of whom are working people, on salary or wages, that if they persist in their run on the banks they will make it impossible for employers to get money to pay them; and business will shut down, employment will cease, and the goose will be killed that lays the golden eggs. Unquestionably. But why take the trouble to say these things? Keep your breath to cool your porridge, or to talk to your herd of buffaloes.

The hegrira ran till it spent itself. So did the crusades, and the awakened energy of the French Revolution. The frenzy of revival meetings does the same. It is the law of every human movement, from whatever cause. In any stir or movement in the animal world, great or small—and man on one side of his nature belongs to the animal world—the instinct predominates, and there's no stopping it till it is tired out. In our early days on the Pacific Coast we frequently heard glowing reports of gold discovery. They were vague, indefinite and unverified, but every man would pack his traps and start. The crowd would push on hundreds of miles; the reports would fade out, and one gold-seeker after another would halt and turn back; till finally the head of the column, becoming smaller and smaller, stopping nowhere, yet would dissolve and disappear. A financial panic and run on the banks is very much the same thing.

Attempt to check it by council often has the effect of acceleration of the "run" because it may awaken new suspicion and add to the general fear. Some—not a few—have said "Why should the Oregonian try to stop us from getting our money? It must want to protect the banks; and its advice shows that our money is in danger." Wise counsel therefore may only increase and aggravate the difficulties of a situation.

Not till unreason has run its course can it ever be successfully met with reason. The money of the depositors in the Merchants National Bank was in no peril, except that which a large body of the depositors themselves created by their run on the bank. Their own fear alone was the agent that produced the catastrophe which they dreaded would catch them. But man is at least as wise as other animals.

Good advice is cheap; it is wasted on any one in a panic of fright that he is about to lose his money. Yet we have here the strange phenomenon of widespread general confidence that the country is all right and will get through this little trouble without serious injury, but at the same time much distrust and alarm by the individual that something is going to happen to him. He knows the country is safe, its industries thriving, its marketable products enormous and its banks solvent. Yet he thinks the way to safety lies in withdrawing his particular moiety of gold from general circulation and putting it in a tin can and burying it in a deep hole in his back yard. By word he encourages his neighbor to leave his money in the bank and go as usual about his daily duties; by his example he contributes to general financial paralysis and the universal cessation of industry.

Withal we have been, and are, moving along in a period of unexampled prosperity. In our own particular section of the United States there seemed until recently to be no cloud upon the industrial horizon. Commodities to sell we have in large quantities and extraordinary variety. Wheat, our chief product, has yielded a vast crop and the market is better than it has been for years. Fruits are plentiful and prices high. Our lumber output is great and the market satisfactory. Everything on which the people of the Pacific Northwest have depended for an income seems to have been produced or manufactured this year in unusual volume. So we have the things to sell that the world must buy. They are being bought and will be bought. There must be a great inflow of gold from their sale. There is no doubt about it. Everybody knows there is no doubt about it; yet our people are looking one another in the face and wondering if here and now is not the end of all things. They should know better. They do know better.

The storm has been sharp and violent, and it will soon be over. The skies are clearing. Everybody sees it, or can see it if they look up.

A serious drouth prevails in India and Australia, and fears are also expressed that it is becoming entirely too dry in Texas, Georgia and Kentucky.

The old-fashioned Democrat in Col. Wattersou's state expresses the maximum of bewildered astonishment in six words: "Kentucky has gone dry and Republican!"

Under the new system of finance it is possible for the humblest citizen to write his own money on a typewriter, provided he can induce the butcher and baker to take it.

Next to being good winners, Secretary Taft urges the Filipinos to be good losers. That is the kind of philosophy the secretary proposes to carry into the campaign of 1908.

It has just been discovered that with in the last year John D. Rockefeller has contributed to the relief of 2000 of the lowly poor in New York. This much, at least, ought to be deducted from the big fine.

American girls have invested $900,000,000 in foreign titled husbands. The return flow of gold is comparatively small. Why not take a hint from the Bank of England and mark up the girls 7 per cent?

A new method of sending photographs by wire has been successfully introduced in France and is called telestereography. The French Academy must be sleeping on its post to permit the coinage of such ponderous words.

A certain kind of fruit is accused of causing baldness, but there was a time when the French would not eat potatoes, a report having been circulated that they induced freckles. These vagrant yarns should not be allowed to injure the standing of wholesome food.

The national banks are increasing their circulation at the rate of $1,250,000 a day, and gold is pouring in by the ocean prethounds. If the hoarders will quit, the supply of currency will soon be ample. Keep the money circulating. The channels of trade are the place for it.

Holland has plenty of waterways and has become rich enough by its commerce to reclaim large tracts of land from the sea, carrying on it has been said, "a career of conquest armed with a pump, and prepared to hold its outposts by the windmill." The Dutch canals are land builders as well as cheap transportation equalizers.

A trackless trolley car, such as is in use in Germany, has been placed on a New Haven line. It can travel on a track by trolley power, but, by means of a storage battery, is able to leave the rails and make a run over common roads for a distance of twenty five miles. This is an age of new transportation wrinkles by land, water and air.

An organization has been formed by the citizens of Atlanta, Ga., to have the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic held in that city in 1909. Next year's reunion will take place in Toledo. As a center of military interest Atlanta has strong claims, and many of the old trenches and other relics of 1064 are still visible in its surroundings.

The United States leads the world in the exportation of agricultural implements, with the United Kingdom as its principal competitor. In the fifteen years ended 1905, the extension of trade to foreign countries has been remarkable. In 1905 agricultural implements formed 18.5 per cent of the per cent was 15.9, while in 1890 the portion was only 4.7 per cent. Russia's purchases in 1905 were nearly four times as much as in 1900, and Argentina increased its purchases by 188.7 per cent. Thus, we not only beat the world farming, but also in making the tools to farm with. We feed the world while furnishing them with up-to-date, scientific inventions for lightening the burden of farm labor and greatly extending the productive possibilities of agriculture.

Women of all sorts and conditions attended the recent National Union of Women Workers at London, England, to discuss plans for their betterment, and to protest against wage discrimination on account of sex. It was decided that the trades unions could not help the unskilled women workers, because it is too expensive to maintain such organizations. It was agreed that nothing could be expected from the individual employer, and that state intervention was their only salvation. Some of the leading spirits urged that working women should avoid marriage until after the age of 25 at least, thereby lessening the size of families and allowing time for more complete equipment for the duties of wifehood and motherhood. One speaker was greeted with enthusiasm when she urged a definite plan for the payment of motherhood, which, she said, was the only form of industry now unpaid.

How much we are affected by heredity and how much by our environment is one of those subjects which people pericially discuss but upon which they never seem to arrive at any very definite conclusion. There is, indeed, so much to be said on both sides that in the absence of actual proof it is somewhat difficult, however much we may lean to one side or the other, to pronounce definitely on either. At the same time, it has always seemed a subject upon which a good deal of interesting experiment might be tried, while to the enterprising philanthropist no more absorbing field for his energies could be found than in the adoption from the day of their birth of a certain number of babies from diametrically opposed classes, and their subsequent education under precisely similar conditions. In these circumstances one wonders would the child of the Bishop display remarkably different characteristics to the child of the criminal, or the child of the aristocrat be so immeasurably superior to the child of the coal heaver? Would in fact, the vice or the social virtues of the parents predominate, or would the refining influence of a wise and careful upbringing bring the lower up to the level of the higher, and a bad education drag the higher down to the denigrating plane of the lower?

A Reliable Remedy for Croup.

With the dry cold weather of the early winter months, parents of croupy children should be on the alert for ominous symptoms. There is no cause for anxiety, however, when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is kept in the house. If this medicine is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the croupy cough has appeared, the attack may be warded off. Mrs. S. Rosenthal, of Turner, Michigan, says: "We have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for ourselves and children for several years and like it very much. I think it is the only remedy for croup and can highly recommend it." For sale by Clough's Drug Store.

LINGERING COLD.
Withstood Other Treatment But Quickly Cured by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"Last winter I caught a very severe cold which lingered for weeks," says J. Urquhart, of Zeddyr, Ontario. "My cough was very dry and harsh. The local dealer recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and guaranteed it, so I gave it a trial. One small bottle of it cured me. I believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to be the best I ever used." This remedy is for sale by Clough's Drug Store.

Appendicitis

Is pain in a large measure to abuse of the bowels, by employing drastic purgatives. To avoid all danger, use only Dr. King's New Life Pills, the safe, gentle cleanser and invigorator. Guaranteed for headache, biliousness, malaria and jaundice, at Chas. I. Clough, Drug store, 25c.

A Good Liniment.

When you need a good reliable liniment try Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It has no superior for sprains and swellings. For sale by Clough's Drug Store.
