Thaw and Higher Law.

A recent statement that Harry Thaw was fighting hard to break into an insane asylum is justified by the event, however displeasing the event may be to emotional or sentimental souls, or those who would prevent "the higher law" to cowardly uses. The opinion was predicted upon the conviction that no court in Christendom would allow a man, acquitted of murder only on the plea of a murderous mania, to walk out of the courtroom free. The theory of the defense in the first Thaw trial was the one of emotional insanity. It was, in its essence, an appeal to the higher law which, if it had been made on broadly human grounds, might, possibly, have been effective. To characterize as "dementia America" a human rage so old that the Hebrew writers said of it "The fury of a jealous man is raging and he will not spare," must have disgusted every intelligent man in the first Thaw jury. At any rate the record is that, on his plea of emotional insanity, Thaw was not acquitted, and that his counsel, recognizing this logic of fact, made his second ground of defense what was practically a prognosis of insanity from earlier symptoms.

This was the ground of acquittal, as the court was called to view it. However opinion may incline to the belief that sympathy for the young woman in the case, or the depravity of Stanford White's life, may influenced jurymen, what the jury reported was that the prisoner was not guilty because of his proved insanity. It was not to be supposed that any wise or just judge would release a prisoner acquitted by such a verdict, under such circumstances. The fact that Thaw was expecting an immediate release was made plain by his opposition to the advice of his counsel to acquiesce in the order of removal to an asylum, and his demand for the suing out of a writ of habeas corpus in the case. This attitude of the prisoner is not so significant as the fact of a general public expectation that an acquittal on the ground of insanity would result in an immediate discharge from custody.

Poverty is a Crime.

Do you call poverty crime? The worst of crimes. All the other crimes are virtues beside it. All the other dishonors are chivalry itself by comparison. Poverty blights whole cities, spreads horrible pestilence, strikes dead the very souls of all who come within sight, sound or smell of it. What you call crime is nothing; a murder here and a theft there, a blow now and a curse then; what do they matter? They are only the accidents and illness of life; there are not fifty genuine professional criminals in London. But there are millions of poor people, abject people, dirty people, ill fed, ill clothed people. They poison us morally and physically; they kill the happiness of society; they force us to do away our own liberties and to organize unnatural cruelties for fear they should rise against us and drag us down into their abyss. Only fools fear crime; we all fear poverty. Pah! You talk of your half-saved ruffian in the Salvation Army shelter? Bring him to me here, and I will drag his soul to salvation for you. Not by words and dreams, but by 38 shillings a week, a sound house in a handsome street and a permanent job. In three weeks he will have a fancy waistcoat; in three months a tall hat and a chapel sitting; before the end of the year he will shake hands with a duchess at a Primrose League meeting and join the Conservative party.

He will be better fed; better housed, better clothed, better behaved, and his children will be pounds heavier and bigger. That will be better than an American cloth mattress in a shelter, chopping firewood, eating bread and treacle, and being forced to kneel down from time to time to thank heaven for it; kneel drill, I think you call it. It is cheap work converting starving men with a Bible in one hand and a slice of bread in the other. I will undertake to convict West Ham to Mahometanism on the same terms. Try your hand on my workmen; their souls are hungry because their bodies are full.—George Bernard Shaw.

Enlistments in the army and navy have been increasing lately. The voyage of the big fleet has had a favorable effect on the service. For the unemployed who can pass the examination the opening is considered by many one of the best.

Marrying for Titles.

Representative Adolph A. Sabath, of Illinois, a native of Bohemia and a bachelor, believes, to quote his own words, that "the fathers of our American girls are paying out too much real gold in the purchase of tinsel crowns."

With a view to discouraging the practice he introduced a bill to provide a 25 per cent tax upon "all dowries, gifts, settlements or advances of property made in consideration of or contemplation of marriage by citizens or subjects of the United States of America to persons other than citizens or subjects of the United States of America."

"Since the initiation by the Astors of the practice of marrying American girls to foreign titles," said Mr. Sabath, "400,000,000 has been drawn from the private wealth of citizens of the United States in dowries and marriage settlements paid within the last fourteen years."

Representative Hull, of Iowa, declared he would propose an amendment looking to giving the girl or her family the tax thus proposed "upon the usual divorce" or the husband's desertion of the girl.

It is a safe guess that by the time Mr. Bryan gets through with the Democratic organization there will never be another one-man party in this country.

By the time they finish their cruise our sixteen battle ships will be able to furnish the highest living authority on the glad hand and international hospitality.

Cuba's first president had been long a resident of the United States. Perhaps the island is waiting to find another man with a thorough preliminary American training.

If Thaw objects to the society in which he finds himself, he can blame his counsel for making out too strong a case. Yet the alternative might have been still more unpleasant.

It is said that a plant discovered in Nicaragua appears to be charged with electricity. At certain times of the day if the plant is touched a distinct shock will be felt. Its influence upon the magnetic needles is very noticeable.

Paris has a few yellow papers that insist on war between the United States and Japan as an inevitable event. This seems to be a branch of the Paris clique system, and will eventually be identified as a stock jobbing contrivance.

In 1805 Canada imported from the United States goods worth $82,000,000. Last year the figures were $112,000,000 or more than half of the Canadian imports. A short haul, the best prices, and the most desirable products are sure to win.

Last year British imports exceeded British exports by $640,000,000, while American exports were greater than American imports by $500,000,000. Some political economists say they prefer the British side of the ledger, but Americans are few who would agree to a swap.

The Republican party has many men fit to be president, but not one of them is as great as the party, nor are all combined. But Mr. Bryan is the Democrat party, and its prospects are what might be expected from so lamentable a plight of a once self-governing organization.

The chairman of several agricultural boards have been interviewed as to whether rural free delivery pays or not. They give the usual affirmative reasons, and so many more that escape the casual observer that the reader is convinced the system is one of the best yet invented for the public good.

Physicians have great hopes in the electric light as a pain killer. Experiments are now being carried on in New York. The patient is subjected to what is known as the lucidescence light, focused by parabolic reflectors. The light is turned upon the seat of pain for fifteen or twenty minutes at a time, much care being taken not to burn the flesh. In most instances the pain is lessened or stopped altogether.

The United States Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision, holds a boycott of manufacturers engaged in interstate commerce to be illegal and that those who engage in the boycotts are liable to damages. Thus the highest court declares that trade organizations that are responsible for boycotts violate the law against combinations formed in restraint of trade. The decision was announced by Chief Justice Fuller and there was no dissenting opinion.

Finding that high wages and a country dance given in their honor did not suffice to keep hired men, Walter Sweetson, a wealthy farmer near Wagon, South Dakota, offered to purchase an automobile for the use of his farm hands. But an Indiana farmer goes Mr. Sweetson one better. He not only offers to furnish help with stylish rigs to go to town in the evenings, but also puts at their service either of his pretty daughters to act as escort. If this last does not fetch 'em, then has the last spark of chivalry departed from the bosom of men who work for hire on farms.

The boy who is sent to the agricultural college, where he learns the practical lessons of farming and farm economy, has a much better chance of success than the one who depends on picking up all his knowledge from experiences he goes along. Education, if it is the right kind and practical, acts as so much capital paid up at the start. If to a thorough technical training the young farmer adds energy, enterprise and good sense, he almost has a patent on the prospects of success in his business. The farmer of the future will be scientifically educated and thoroughly trained both by precept and example as to where to begin, how to take hold, how to buy and feed stock, the quality of soils and many other things indispensable in agriculture.

Farmers occasionally turn inventors, but not as often as they should, because from them the country has a right to expect improvements evolved by their practical experience. We observe that a farmer living near Meade, Kansas, has invented a new machine designed to relieve horses of heavy work. In reality it is a combination of the traction engine and gasoline motor. But it is much lighter than the old engine, which had to carry huge timbers as protection for country bridges. The car now in use weighs only 4,100 pounds; and is of thirty horse power. It may be run with gasoline, alcohol or kerosene. It has two speeds, the low one for use in the field and the higher one for the road. It moves across Meade county sod, the toughest to be found, pulling gang plows that turn six furrows at a time, and it is done so easily that effort is not noticeable. When the time comes to haul the wheat crop to market a train of wagons is hitched behind the auto-tractor and hauled down the road at the rate of six miles an hour.

"With all due respect," says President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor in the February Federationist, "it is impossible for us to see how we can comply with all the terms of this injunction." He refers to the December 18 order of Justice Gould of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, enjoining the federation and its officials from making any reference to the case brought by the Buck Stove and Range Company's relations with organized labor. Mr. Gompers goes on to say that he would not be performing his duty to labor and to the public without discussing this injunction and do all in his power to point out the invasion of the people's liberties which has taken place, including the right of free speech. Using the editorial "we," he says it is their duty to discuss it and to protest against its issuance and enforcement. And get the editor does not consider himself to be violating any law of state or nation in so doing. At some length he then proceeds to discuss the question at issue, holding that the injunction was never intended to apply to other than properly rights.
