Interesting Scraps.

The cranks continue to pursue Roosevelt and Taft. They do not seem to have anything against the other tickets. This year's corn condition is 80 per cent of normal in the leading corn growing states—a bad omen for Bryan.

In trying to make Kentucky a reliable Democratic state the Legislature only succeeded in making it reliably doubtful.

The uplift that farmers want first of all is willing workers at fair wages. For several years the demand has been larger than the supply.

The Democratic appeal to farmers for $100 bills can best be symbolized by a frosted pumpkin unaccompanied by a shock of fodder.

Gov. Hughes is a very prudent and accurate marksman. In refuting the arguments of Bryan he sacrificed nothing but birdshot.

The calm manner with which Gov. Hughes permits fretful machine politicians to dig their own graves is an interesting political study.

Whatever may be said of Uncle Joe Cannon, it can not be charged that he is afraid to express his convictions, nor that he fails to express them vigorously.

Mr. Bryan's new issue of guaranteed bank deposits is going to pieces so fast under examination that he will hide it with the rest of his busted propositions before election day.

One of the Hawaiian Islands is to be elaborately fortified for a garrison of 15,000 men. The key of the Pacific is a great outpost and it is as cheap to keep a part of the army there as elsewhere.

A little problem for mathematical experts. If a perpetual Democratic candidate for the presidency has an income of $75,000 a year, what is his estate worth, rating the party at nothing?

A Charleston paper says the $100,000 South Carolina ought to contribute to the Bryan campaign fund has all been received except $98,000. Somehow the Bryan yell peters out when the hat is passed around.

Gov. Hughes expresses the idea that Bryan would cease to be great in politics the moment he ceased to be repudiated. Mr. Bryan may accordingly count on continued greatness, such as it is.

According to a summary published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, the deaths by accident in connection with the celebration of the Fourth of July this year number 163, and the total of the injured is 5460. This is one less than the number killed on the Fourth last year, but 1210 more than last year's record of the injured.

"The United States Navy possesses in the scout cruiser Salem the fastest warship in the world," says the Scientific American. "In the recent government standardization trial over the measured mile course off Rockland, Me., this handsome vessel was driven at a maximum speed at 26.88 knots and at an average speed for five runs over the mile course of 25.95 knots."

Mrs. Bertha Ayrton has succeeded in ascertaining the cause of the refractory behavior of the searchlight in certain respects and in devising a remedy. The British admiralty called on Prof. Ayrton to investigate the trouble some time ago. After making many investigations he turned the problem over to his wife, who is the only woman member of the Institute of Electrical Engineers and who received the only medal ever awarded to a woman by the Royal Society of London for original unaided work.

"Why doesn't the Republican party do something for the farmers?" asks Mr. Bryan. This belongs to the same category as his other fool query, "Shall the people rule?" Somebody ought to tell Bryan about the homestead act, which the Republican party put on the statute book just as soon as it gained power in the government, and which the Democratic party had debekated while it held sway. That act, passed forty five years ago, did more than any other single factor toward peopling the West. It contributed hundreds of thousands of settlers to Bryan's own state.

In the Federal Court at Chicago, counsel for the Standard Oil Company of Indiana filed its answer to the petition of the government for a rehearing of the $29,000,000 fine case. The trust attorneys say that that evidence showing that the defendant had no unlawful intention in accepting the rates offered by the Alton was improperly withdrawn from the jury and the law as to knowledge and intent was misconstrued by the trial court and that the trial court had no right to consider the parent company as the real offender. Also they say it is unreasonable to put shippers and railroads on the same footing as to knowledge of rates.

Perhaps most of the scolding done in the world is between husbands and wives, between parents and children. Parents must instruct their children; they must some times reprove them. They must often counsel them. But they are in great danger of "provoking them to wrath"—in the wise biblical phrase. Children have the keenest possible sense of justice; they are also very easily hurt, and when their minds are bruised the result is estrangement, and that is as sad a thing as can ever be. An impious, scolding father or mother frightens the children away, drives them into all manner of evasions and subterfuges, and brands their minds forever with the memory of cruel and blistering words.

The mystery surrounding the death of Dr. Rustin, of Omaha, who was shot and killed on the porch of his house during the night recently, was cleared at the inquest by the confession and testimony of Mrs. Rice, the young woman with whom the doctor had been infatuated. There had been a compact between him and her by which she was to shoot him and then herself, thus enabling him to provide for his wife and family with insurance money. She weakened at the crucial moment and then the doctor found a young man, Charles Davis, son of a local banker, and drug fiend, who agreed to shoot the doctor if he would give him a drug with which to commit suicide. Davis recovered from his poison dose and Mrs. Rice was arrested before she could summon courage to kill herself. But it remained to be proved that Davis killed Rustin.

What Debs says must be judged first by his words and next in the light of the platform of his party. He is full of denunciation and ridicule of both Taft and Bryan. He affects to hold them as both under the dominion of accumulated wealth, both under the restraint of laws which were framed in the interest of wealth. The natural conclusion is that until there is a general smashing of laws and a new adjustment, justice will wander desolate and have no home in this Republic. Some naturally good men who personally are scrupulously honest believe in and endorse Eugene Debs. This perhaps is not strange. This glamour of the dream of that impossible time when there will be no more poverty nor want and when things will be so adjusted that there will be no temptation to commit crime, is doubtless very sweet to men who believe that some changes in legislation may bring around such a result. But the rank and file of his followers, the great majority are men who are quite willing to eat bread that they never earned and who are not disturbed about the equities of this world in the least so long as they personally are favored.

The very foundation of the Debs creed is a false one, to-wit: that all that is come of manual labor. The manual is not put in, but that is how the great mass of the party construes it. Hence, immediately comes the first conclusion that one man is as good as another, and, in the general shuffle, is entitled to an equal reward with all other men, and that all will be that way when the government takes them into its employ. That is of course the leveling of all the men and women of the world to one plane. Under such a regime what would become of the homes of the country? Mr. Debs tells of the hundreds of thousands of fallen women in the land. But when all are reduced to one level is that going to interpose a shield between women and vice? He assumes that most of these have gone astray through want. He ought to know enough of the world to realize that this is the exception and not the rule. The keepers of bagnios report that they are continually besieged by young women wanting admittance. And yet it is almost impossible to secure the services of women to do common house work at the highest wages. And still a competent woman can get steady wages, through which with ordinary prudence she can lay up more money in two years than had either of any twenty families of those men and women who cleared the forests and made homes in the west. An army without order and discipline soon becomes an irresponsible mob. Break down the rules which make men responsible for their acts and chaos will come. Take from men the incentive to achieve something more than mere bread, or a petty office, and progress will stop in a day and degeneration begin.

FINISH FINE ROAD. Splendid Highway Aetween Seaside and Elk Creek, on Route to Tillamook.

SEASIDE, Or., Sept. 19.—For more than a quarter of a century the talk of the western part of Clatsop County has been of a good county road between Seaside and Elk Creek at the northern end of Cannon Beach on the Pacific Ocean. The road is now a consummation. It was completed last Saturday, and turned over to Clatsop County.

From Seaside the road has been in course of construction for several years. The three miles of road over the hill, making the divide between Necanicum River and Elk Creek, was all that was left to be constructed two years ago, and it was by far the hardest part to construct. Practically nothing was done on it last year, and the prospect was not inviting for more to be done this year, until some prominent citizens of Portland and Astoria took the matter up with County Judge Trenchard and the Clatsop County Commissioners, and the latter finally agreed that if the interested people would donate a reasonable amount the county would finish the grade this year. A paper was circulated and $1800 was soon subscribed by responsible people in Portland and Astoria. The County Court immediately advertised for bids, let the contract, and work was begun last May with the result above stated.

The grading of the three miles cost over $7000 or about one seventh of the amount expended this year on Clatsop County roads; and it is far in excess of the amount that section would be entitled to in proportion to the population or value of property, but other things had weight. One route for a road from Astoria to Tillamook Bay is by way of Elk Creek and Cannon Beach, and two miles of road at Arch Cape will complete the road to the Tillamook County line. But the authorities of Tillamook County preferred the Nehalem River route, and Clatsop County acceded to their preference. The difference is this: By the Cannon Beach route Clatsop County has two miles to build and Tillamook 12. On the Nehalem route the thing is reversed, Tillamook will have to build only two miles and Clatsop 12. Clatsop County has undertaken the big end of the Nehalem project and also announces that whenever Tillamook County is ready for the road via Arch Cape, Clatsop County will promptly build its share thereof.

The work of putting a thick coat of broken rock on the new road has already been begun and will be completed in ample time for the sea beach travel of next summer. In fact, it is intended to be one of the finest roads for automobiles along the coast anywhere.

As heretofore reported in The Oregonian the new road over the divide to Elk Creek is built on the remarkably easy grade of 5 per cent, and to obtain this required much engineering skill and added greatly to the scenic beauty of the route. Clatsop County is also expending a large sum of money this year on the Astoria-Jewell road, which is a main link in the proposed automobile road from Portland to the sea, and other roads have received marked attention, the result of all which has been that since last New Year's day Clatsop County has expended more than $50,000 in good roads construction.

A Traveling Man Received the Thanks of Every Passenger in the Car.

"I must tell you my experience on an East bound O. R. & N. R. R. train from Penikese to Le Grande, Ore.," writes Sam A. Garber, a well known traveling man. "I was in the smoking department with some other traveling men when one of them went out into the coach and came back and said, 'There is a woman sick unto death in the car.' I at once got up and went out. I found her very ill with cramp colic, so bad in fact that I was almost afraid to take the risk; her hands and arms were drawn up so you could not straighten them, and with a deathlike look on her face. Two or three ladies were working with her and giving her whiskey. I went to my suitcase and got my bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy (I never travel without it) ran to the water tank, put a double dose of the medicine in the glass, poured some water into it and stirred it with a pencil, then I had quite a time to get the ladies to let me give it to her, but I succeeded. I could at once see the effect and I worked with her, rubbing her hands, and in twenty minutes I gave her another dose. By this time we were almost into Le Grande, where I was to leave the train. I gave the bottle to the husband to be used in case another dose should be needed, but by the time the train ran into Le Grande she was all right, and I received the thanks of every passenger in the car." How to Get Strong

P. J. Daly, of 1247 W. Congress St., Chicago, tells of a way to become strong: He says: "My mother, who is old and was very feeble, is deriving so much benefit from Electric Bitters, that I feel it my duty to tell those who need a tonic and strengthening medicine about it. In my mother's case a marked gain in flesh has resulted, insomnia has been overcome, and she is steadily growing stronger." Electric Bitters quickly remedy stomach, liver and kidney complaints.
