Interesting Scraps.

In 1904 Parker carried thirteen states in forty-five. In Nebraska Bryan made a herculean effort for Parker, and so kept the Republican majority down to 86,000.

For four years Mr. Taft had charge of 30,000 workmen at Panama, and they unite in saying that he is a good boss as well as efficient in carrying forward the business in hand.

Mr. Bryan supposed his superficial smartness would shine by challenging the president in letter writing. Bryan is involved in a sea of old troubles and making new ones for himself.

James J. Hill says the cost of one battleship would start a thousand schools of agriculture. But that wouldn't stop the boys in the cornfields from enlisting in the navy and sailing around the world.

Gov. Hughes declares that "when the women of New York really want the ballot they will get it." The suffragettes fail to show, as a starting point, that the majority of their sisters are with them.

The discovery that the Standard Oil pipe line had a connection with the Democratic national campaign fund is calculated to make the American people thoughtful on the subject of subterranean politics.

Mr. Hearst appears to be running for president in 1912 and taking an early start to get ahead of Bryan. But the Perpetual announced several years ago that he would be in the hands of his friends until 1928.

The mammoth just uncovered in Northern Siberia is the best existing specimen, with the head perfect, and a well-preserved trunk. It is hundreds of centuries old, and easily leads all the cold-storage exponents.

It was President McKinley who persuaded Mr. Taft to resign a place on the bench and take charge in the Philippines. Mr. Taft has had the favorable opinion of some of the best judges of men this country has ever known in high places.

An Illinois Democratic paper says it is silly for Republicans to bring up the subject of free silver. Isn't it far more silly to run the free silver apostle for president after two defeats and try to hide the former paramount issue?

Col. Bryan will gain nothing by writing letters to President Roosevelt or pestering him with telegrams. Those who have heretofore tried this plan have learned that the president always carries something up his sleeve besides his cuff.

"I put Mr. Taft's deeds against your words," writes the president to Mr. Bryan. "I ask that Mr. Taft be judged by all his deeds, for he wishes none of them forgotten. I ask that you be judged both by the words that, seemingly, you and your party now desire to have forgotten." The test proposed is a fair one to apply to any candidate.

Events in the past few days have destroyed the last vestige of hope for Bryan and his cause. It is only fair to say, moreover, that no fair-minded person need waste any sympathy on Bryan in his affliction. If he had listened to some of the men who warned him in advance about the persons who have recently figured among his associates he would have been saved the humiliation into which he is now plunged. The Hearst and other disclosures of the week now ending have compelled Bryan to make a radical change in the personnel of his general staff. Yet if he had listened to the warnings of a few months ago this elimination of some of his close associates would have been unnecessary, for they would not have been appointed in the first place. But the stubbornness and wrongheadedness for which he has been noted plunged him into trouble at the beginning of the canvass of 1908, and no disclaimers or eliminations which he can make now can save him from abject and overwhelming defeat.

Aeronautics have gone too far, are moving with too broad a sweep, and have reached too great a degree of general success to be halted now. The fatal breaking of the Orville Wright aeroplane will no more arrest the progress of flying machines than the accidental death of the English statesman, Huskisson, at the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railroad on another September day seventy-eight years ago, stopped the building of steam railways. Some casualties are certain in all forms of locomotion, and those who will not trust themselves on any form of wheels must still cross streets and descend stairways. The Wright brothers have been circling in the air with a facility that seemed to be a solution of the problem of soaring which is a refinement of flying. But winged creatures have not yet been matched in this complexity. A bird has the power under all circumstance to convert itself into a parachute with every muscle and feather under intelligent control. Aeroplanes disturbed in their levels, their power, or their structure are but inert matter except as far as human intelligence can be brought to bear in an emergency. Two men soaring in the air must look well to details and novel conditions.

Having previously asked the Republican and Democratic candidates to tell what they thought was the matter with America, Lincoln Steffens has now had the courage and fairness to put the same question to the Socialist candidate, Eugene V. Debs, and the result is given in the October Everybody's Magazine. Steffens admits that Debs is dangerous to the property interest, and says that it may be "deemed expedient to hang Debs some day," but adds that they should not try to hurt him, for he is beyond hurt, "because he loves mankind too much to be hurt of men; and that's the danger." Steffens says that the trouble with Debs is, "that he puts the happiness of the race above everything—business, prosperity property." The answer of Debs is that capitalism is the matter and that Socialism is the remedy. He would have use and service the aim of human effort, not profit, but he insists that the Socialists do not preach a gospel of hate but do preach love. He says they do not teach classes, but only say what is true, that they do exist now, but that is just what Socialism is trying to do away with. It is merely preparing men's minds for the coming change which he believes to be inevitable. Debs admitted frankly that he was not fitted by temperament for the presidency at this time, and that if he thought he had any chance of election he would not run. He is running to teach social consciousness and to ask men to sacrifice the present for the future. He adds that "when Socialism is on the verge of success the party will nominate an able executive and a clear-headed administrator; not—not Debs."

QUEER EXPRESSIONS.

Used by Those Who Wish to Swear Without Being Profane.

Pseudo swear words are of strange and wondrous kind, and great ingenuity is used in thinking them up. Of course "darn" and "durn's" parentage is not hard to guess, but such expressions as "geewillikins," "golly" and "gosh," when used as substitutes for profane words, are harder to trace. A southerner once was heard to use in the course of a single description the expressions "dog bite 'em," "gosh all fishhooks," "dad rat 'em" and "jumpin' gee whizz."

From a man who lives in Connecticut come these expressions: "Great horned toads and firecrackers," "gum swat," "gol dast it" and "by the ternal bowwows."

A Pennsylvanian is responsible for the expression "sacrificial pollywogs," the meaning of which is not exactly clear. Many Hoosiers swear "by gravity," and the exclamation "Jinny crouts" is common in some parts of the country. A Chicago man relieves his overwrought feelings after missing a shot in billiards by shouting "sacred amlets" and "mook of the forest."

The Germans like to make remarks about thunder and lightning when they wish to be real naughty, the Frenchmen take to little sayings about "thousand cannons" or some large number of "thunders," and sailors are credited with great oaths embodying the "great horn spoon" or a willingness to "shiver my timbers," but probably the American who wishes to swear without being profane finds as many queer expressions as any one.—Chicago Tribune.

GOLD AND SILVER.

The Process of Assaying Both Metals is Identical.

The process of assaying gold and silver is identical. The metal is first put through a highly heated furnace and melted, the sample for assay being dipped out while the metal is in a liquid state. Next the sample is thrown into a vessel of cold water, when granulation ensues. Taken from the cold bath, it is boiled in sulphuric acid, the silver dissolving, while the gold is precipitated to the bottom, where it is caught in proper receptacles.

The acid is now drawn off and the metal placed in another vessel laid with sheet lead, the bottom being plates of copper. Chemical action now sets in, the acid, copper and lead being in a ferment. While the gold is being precipitated the silver, if there be any in the sample under test, is being deposited in thin metallic sheets on what before the fermentation set in were the copper plates, but which have now been transformed into blue vitriol or sulphate of copper.

After the metals have all been deposited they are gathered up and with the impurities still remaining pressed into cakes by a hydraulic machine which has a pressure of 200 tons. Again it is melted (the gold and silver each in separate vats, of course), the pure metal being again deposited and the impurities, aided by chemical action, left floating on the top. The next and last process runs the metals into ingots ready for the markets of the world.

Making a Dictionary.

When Johnson got his famous dictionary started he calculated that with six assistants he could complete the task in three years. It took him nine years instead. He received the small recompense of $7,500 and had to pay his assistants out of that.

Webster worked twenty-four years before his dictionary made its bow to the world. Webster was very punctilious in his definitions and so painstaking that it was a wonder he completed the work when he did.

The words which give the compiler of a dictionary the most trouble are the little one syllable Saxon words. Their history extends back into the Saxon period, and their meaning has become twisted in many directions. Words with pedigrees are the hardest to trace.

Not All Loss.

Quotations cleverly malapropos or neatly distorted furnish half the wit of the professional humorist. Nevertheless, when such a verbal misstep is spontaneous, there is often real fun in it.

A young man had been out sailing with his sister and a friend of hers. He did not know particularly well the fine points of the art, and on trying to make the landing against a head wind he exclaimed after several vain attempts:

"Well, it is better to have luffed and lost than never to have luffed at all."
