A little girl of thirteen or so found herself one day possessed of a new emotion-a desire to be pretty. She struggled with it. but finally went to the long mirror in the hall and for the first time in her life looked at herself critically from head to foot. She saw what most girls see at thirteen-a lanky creature, mostly legs and arms, hands and feet. It hurt her, and she the governor of a state went out of doors to think it over. Thought resulted in tears, and in tears she was found half an hour later by her particular chum, a boy near her own age. Anxious inquiry as to why she was crying induced her to speak. "Oh, Harold," she walled, "I've just looked at myself in the glass, and I'm so homely!"

The boy was puzzled, but sympathetic, and made an effort at consolation. He looked at her a minute, then awkwardly patted her, saying sooth-

Not homely. Alice; just funny looking."-New York Times.

Doesn't Know her Age. There is a glaring phase of unfairness in the position of the two sexes, despite all our struggles for the suffrage. A woman still dreads to tell her age, no matter how youthful she may look, while as long as a man looks youthful he is generally willing to admit and even to boast of how many milestones he has passed. There is at least one father who understood this problem in time and who gave his daughter a fair chance in life by never letting her know how old she was. He realized at her birth that a time would come when she would not want to tell her age, and he spared her the humiliation of having to prevaricate, so she was never told either her age or the place where she was born. and there were no birth records preserved in the family.-New York

A Roman woman in the ancient time was not allowed to drink wine except It were simple raisin wine, and however she might relish strong drinks ske could not indulge even by stealth -first, because she was never intrusted with the key of the wine cellar and, second, because she was obliged daily to greet with a kiss all her own as well as her husband's male representatives, down even to second cousins, and as she knew not when or where she might meet them she was forced to be wary and abstain altogether, for had she tasted but a drop the smell would have betrayed her. So strict were the old Romans in this respect that a certain Ignatius Mercurius is said to have slain his wife because he caught her at the wine cask-a punishment which was not deemed excessive by Romulus, who absolved the husband of the crime of murder. Another Roman lady who under the pretense of taking a little wine for her stomach's sake and frequent infirmities indulged somewhat too freely was mulcted to the full amount of her dowry.

"But you mustn't mention it to a living soul. Suppose you were a young girl of my age and three men had proposed to you, one of them a young preacher, fine looking and well educated, the second one a handsome young man in business, swell dresser and thinking the world of you, and the third a rich foreigner with a distinguished air about him and well spoken of by everybody. Which of the three do you think would make the best husband?

"Why, Annabel, child, consult your own heart. Which of the three do you love best?

"Mercy, Uncle Henry! Nobody's proposed to me yet. I'm only trying to get pointers, so I'll know the right man when he comes along."-Chicago

The Preparation of Parchment. Parchment is the skin of sneep or per animals prepared in sheets to render them fit for being written upon. The heavier parchment, used for drumheads, is made from the skins of asses, older calves, wolves and goats. All these are similarly prepared. The skin, being freed from the hair, is placed in a lime pit to cleanse it from fat. The pelt is then stretched upon a frame, care being taken that the surface is free from wrinkles. The flesh is pared off with a circular knife after which it is moistened, and whiting spread over it. Then the workman. with a large pumice stone, rubs the skin. He next goes over it with an fron instrument and rubs it carefully with pumice stone without chalk. Finally the skin is gradually dried, tightening being occasionally required.

A Fast Express.

The slow train is still the target for the shafts of the humorist. Recently "You misunderstand, I want some an English wag sent the following letter to the editor of his local paper: "Sir, is there no way to put a stop to begging along the line of the railway? For instance, yesterday an aged men dicant with a wooden leg kept pace with the afternoon express all the way from Blankton to Spaceley and annoyed the passengers exceedingly, go ing from one open window to another with his importuneate solicitations."

> Prince Henry, the Navigator. The kingdom of Portugal counted in its royal house one of the men who hold first rank in scientific attainment and practical application. He was the son of John I. of Portugal and Queen Philippa (who was an English princess); he spent his life in sending out ships on voyages of discovery, and it was through this Prince Henry, called "the Navigator," that Columbus got his idea of seeking for a new land across the sea.
