

SHOCKED THE GUARD.

Canadian Railway Official Who Did Not Appreciate Kilts.

Many years ago a well known Scotch nobleman went out to one of our smaller dependencies to take up an official position under the governor.

He was a colonel of volunteers at home, and consequently he took out his gorgeous kilt uniform with him to wear on those occasions on which etiquette demanded such an attire.

The necessity for donning his kilt arose soon after he arrived in the colony, and attired in all his glory he took the train from the country station near to which he chanced to be residing at the time to the town where his distinguished presence was required.

At one of the stopping places along the route the guard, to whom kilts were an absolutely unknown article of attire and who apparently, when he looked in at the carriage window and saw the gallant colonel seated therein, imagined that that gentleman had dispensed with his nether garments on account of the heat, said, "We are getting near town, sir."

At the next station he came again, and, seeing the colonel in exactly the same costume, he exclaimed excitedly: "Excuse me, sir, but I must insist on your dressing yourself at once. We shall arrive at the town station in five minutes"—London Tit-Bits.

LUCK AT MONTE CARLO.

A Fly Which Cost the Gambling Room a Small Fortune.

About Jan. 25, 1904, a curious thing happened at Monte Carlo. The superstitious of gamblers is well recognized, but it is seldom that their reliance upon omens brings them such luck as was the case on the above date. At what is known as the "roulette" table in the Monte Carlo gambling rooms the following remarkable incident occurred:

A fly alighted on No. 13 on the roulette table at the time when the players had suffered a persistent run of hard luck. The superstitious gamblers exchanged covert glances and searched their pockets for money with which to make, in a few moments the "middle dozen"—that is to say, the Nos. 13 to 24—were literally covered with stakes. Then an elderly gambler arose and piled napoleons round the square on which the fly had alighted, thus backing the numbers from 10 to 17. Less confident players staked smaller amounts on the "transversals."

The ivory marble was sent spinning round the roulette wheel. There was a moment of suspense and then the croupier announced the winning number—13. But what is far more extraordinary the same number came up three times in succession.

That fly cost the casino over $25,000.

What an Account Book Does.

A bank book with check book and stubs is the easiest way of keeping a cash account, and then you have the bank to prove your account for you. The cash register is a means of keeping accounts of receipts and payments combined with a "bell punch" upon honesty. System is an indispensable requisite of successful business; honesty and ability will not succeed without it. The first step in this direction is the part of youth is keeping a personal cash account. The orderly setting down of receipts and expenditures confronting oneself with what has been expended and for what purpose carries a continual moral, a warning if need be, and a lesson in responsibility. The balance, the proof and the best bring home the power and responsibility of receiving and spending.—A. Barton Hepburn in Leslie's.

The Sympathetic Watch.

The sympathetic watch is all very well, writes a correspondent, but there are many who find that their watches can never be relied upon to behave regularly. Generally the wearer is found to be of a very nervous disposition, and it certainly looks as if this communicated itself to the watch. One inherited by the writer, which had kept good time for years, immediately developed erratic tendencies when worn by him and has never got on of them. Only once for a brief space did a watch go regularly with him. It was a Swiss one, which had worked when worn in England, but kept accurate time on a Swiss holiday. And the question was whether it was the wearer's temporarily braced nerves or the effect of its native air on the watch that did the trick.—London Chronicle.

Spoiled His Speech.

"When I rose to speak it was so still in the hall you could have heard a pin drop."
"Yes?"
"Well, I stood there for a moment looking out over the audience and hearing my first sentence, and I am sure that I should have been able to get along all right, but just before I got ready to utter my first word some fool in the back end of the hall called, "Louder!"—Judge.

They Always Have.

Do you think that your speeches echo down the corridors of time? "I don't know about that," replied a energetic statesman, "but I'm sure some of my comic anecdotes will continue to do so."—Washington Star.

Vinegar.

The ancients accredited great anti-bacterial power to vinegar and used it to a large extent for this purpose notwithstanding its high cost. This quality was greatly overrated.

SENSE OF TASTE.

Curious Selective Powers Exhibited by the Tongue.

Four classes—sweet, bitter, salt and acid—have been assigned to the sense of taste in human beings. These four classes with their combinations produce all the delicious sensations that we ascribe to taste as well as all the disagreeable impressions of that sense.

The tongue, however, is not equally sensitive in all parts to these sensations. Indeed, it has been shown that different tastes result from the same stimulus when applied to different places on the tongue. The tip of the tongue, for instance, is most sensitive to sweet and to acid tastes, while it is far less capable of perceiving a bitter taste than any other part of the organ.

Some persons are unable to perceive any bitter taste when quinine is applied only to the tip of the tongue. At the back of the tongue the bitterness of the drug is perceived at once.

An explanation of the curious selective powers exhibited by the tongue is that a variety of nerve fibers are present in that organ, each kind being sensitive only to one of the four principal classes of taste. These nerve fibers are distributed in varying numbers over different parts of the tongue. At the tip, for example, the nerves that are sensitive to sweet and acid stimuli are most numerous, and accordingly in that locality those tastes are the ones most readily perceived. At the back of the tongue, on the contrary, the nerve fibers concerned in the perception of bitterness prevail over the others.—New York Press.

TERRIBLE WEAPONS.

Ferocious Knives Wielded by the Natives of Hindustan.

The weapon common to every part of Hindustan, so as to deserve the name of the national arm, is the "katar." This is a broad, two edged dagger, the hilt of which is formed something like an H, the hand grasping the crossbar, which is generally double, while the side bars extend on each side of the wrist.

Some katars are made with five blades which unite into one, but by squeezing together the crossbars diverge like the fingers of a hand when the thrust has been given. Other katars are made in sets of two or even three, of diminishing sizes, the blades of the larger being hollow and forming sheaths for the smaller.

Some of the southern Indian katars, known as "death givers," are immense weapons, nearly two feet long in the blade, and the hilts are a mass of fantastic scrollwork and mythological motifs, the cobra with expanded hood figuring largely.

There is also the "bleh'hwa," or scorpion's sting, a doubly curved dagger; the "khanjar," a larger form of the same, and the "peshkabz," or hunting knife. But none of these elaborate weapons has about it the terribly "businesslike" look of the Khyber knife (ch'hura), with its ponderous single edged, tapering blade and plain ivory hilt.—Chambers' Journal.

No Black on Nature's Palette.

Nature uses no black in any part of her work. I will not except the blackberry and the so called black pany. On a bright, clear day shadows on the snow are pale ultramarine blue; under a blue sky in midsummer the color of the placid lake is cobalt blue and the shadows on the grass are lilac; on a weathered gray boardwalk they are nearly as blue as the sky itself. The palpitating atmosphere of a warm July day lifts the coloring of the landscape to a higher but softer key instead of reducing it with gray, and in the autumn, when the sugar maple's leaves are turned to gold, the shadows on the trunk and every gray rock in the vicinity are tinged with strong lilac. In fine, when the sun shines everything, even the shadow which we are prone to believe is gray, is replete with color.—F. Schuyler Mathews.

Pie in Art.

An artist in Chicago tells of a lady in that town who, with her maid, went to purchase a still life picture for her dining room. She selected a canvas on which were painted a bunch of flowers, a pit cut in two and a roll and was about to pay $25 for it when her maid approached to whisper in her ear.

"Excuse me, ma'am," said the servant, but you are making a bad bargain. I saw a picture very much like this sold the other day for $15."
"And was it as good as this?"
"Better, ma'am. There was a good deal more pie in it."—Lippincott's.

Indisputable Proof.

The Landlady—The gentleman that was occupying the room last, sir, was a literary person. The Possible Tenant—What makes you think he was literary? The Landlady—Why, he had ink on his fingers, sir, an' he went away without paying his board.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Discrimination.

"What do you charge for your rooms?"
"Five dollars up."
"But I'm a student!"
"Then it's $5 down."—Cornell Widow.
