The Tillamook Headlight.

Editorial Snap Shots.

So the judge didn't want the sample of paving one individual offered him.

That was only a little Tillamook mist that the Third Regiment enjoyed on Wednesday.

That was a good showing—$80,000 for one month's output from 18 Tillamook cheese factories.

There is no reason why Tillamook City cannot be made a convention town. It is beautifully situated with many attractions for visitors in the surrounding country.

Two attorneys in the Hadley case get into a wrangle, and when the judge intimated that they were liable to spend five days in durance vile they took a tumble and became awfully good.

One of our citizens remarked on Tuesday after one piece of pavement had been taken up, a few real estate agents are responsible for the whole trouble and the expense the taxpayers are put to.

After the snap shot man had gone on a rev. gentleman's bond on Tuesday, he was reminded of a little incident when he was "tough" for a sum of money by an absconding preacher. Because one preacher proved a rascal that did not shake our confidence in other preachers.

Fairview had a nice display at its school fair last year, and now that it will be able to exhibit at the county fair, don't anybody run away with a false notion that it is going to lag behind. Fairview will be there on both feet, and with the goods to carry off the premiums in both hands.

So as to give the ladies of Nehalem who have been raising and exhibiting dahlias for several years an opportunity to display these flowers, prizes will be offered at the fair. We feel sure that the ladies of Nehalem will come to Tillamook with a display of beautiful dahlias that will be a surprise to many.

There is not much time to spare in making preparations for the fair. But to make it a success it is necessary that people decide upon something to exhibit with the object of carrying off some of the prizes. The admirers of Holstein and Jersey stock will be interested, and we predict that the dairymen will make a good showing, and it will surprise a good many persons to see such fine stock.

The sanguinary war between the different paving concerns is now being waged in this city, with professionals in the expert "knocking" business sent here to "knock" with high-priced attorneys engaged to keep up a fight and cause rackets in cities where improvements are being made. As long as this condition of affairs exists pavement will come high, for the people pay for this scrapping.

With the exception of a few individuals who forced the city and taxpayers into a pavement fight, a number of citizens and business men are sick and tired of the whole affair. When the expenses are all figured out it will make most everybody sick, especially the property owners who have no street pavement abutting their property but who will have to help pay some of the expenses, no matter which way the injunction suit ends.

The Nestucca Valley made a fine display at one fair held in this city, and it is only reasonable to expect that that part of the county will do better this year, for the Nestucca is an exceedingly productive valley and we expect to see a large number of the prizes go to that part of the county. Anyway, the Nestuccaites are not going to allow other sections of the county to outdo them if they can help it, hence they are going to carry off a large number of the prizes.

On another page we give the first premium list for the first annual fair given under the auspices of the newly organized Tillamook County Fair Association. It is subject to change, for it is only the first report of premium committee which will be submitted to the Board for its approval. It gives a good idea of what to prepare for and the amount of premiums offered to those who anticipate making entries. The list makes a good showing for the first fair, and it is gratifying to know that the money will go in prizes to those who help to make the fair interesting and attractive. These amounts may be small in some instances, but for a beginning the list makes a good showing, and the officers of the association are showing good judgment in not attempting too much on account of the shortness of the time. The next best thing is to get busy preparing the exhibits. And this is where a large number of citizens can help out and help to make the fair a success and interesting by placing something on exhibition that is raised in Tillamook county. We feel confident that there will be plenty of competition for the prizes and that the first fair of the association will be a credit to the county, a credit to the exhibitors and a credit to the association.

There is some similarity between the persecution methods of the Oregon land cases and the pavement injunction suit being argued in this. Special Prosecutor Heney was after the scalp of Senator Fulton, and the atmosphere was impregnated with all kinds of insinuations and false statements about the senator, to such an extent that people believed they were true. Notwithstanding that Heney had the assistance of Detective Burns and the treasury of the United States at the back of him, when it came down to brass tacks, he could find nothing to justify the falsehoods nor evidence to indict him. Charley's staunchest friends stayed with him because they knew he was not guilty of the malicious falsehoods, and they have reason to be glad that they did so, for he passed through a trying ordeal when Heneyism and tampering with U.S. jurymen appeared to be popular and considered right methods. All manner of accusations have been made against ex-Mayor Harter, even to employing detectives and using dirty methods to incriminate him. The friends of Harter stay with him for the same reasons that the friends of Fulton stayed with him. They have known him for many years and would not believe scandal. It would have shocked many of us who had and still have implicit confidence in Mr. Fulton to have known that he did wrong, so it is with those who have known Mr. Harter for many years.

The estate of the late John Jacob Astor is officially returned at $80,000,000. So many multimillionaires have fallen short in an actual count the $11 in this case looks encouraging.

New York dressmakers report that women are to have a pocket at last, but it is to be a pistol pocket. As headgear is to be smaller the hatpin will no longer be a satisfactory ornament.

Fortune sends almonds to the toothless says an Oriental proverb. In Missouri both toothless and thirsty are protected from the free pretzel and fortune frowns again at the lunch counter.

Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston suggests that the cost of living could be reduced by issuing coins worth 7 cents each. The theory is doubtful. All coinage departures from the decimal system in this country have been failures.

The points won by Mr. Bryan in the preparation of the currency bill are stated to be the right of the government to issue new notes and assert direct control, both prominent points in the old greenback movement.

President Wilson and Secretary Bryan have already changed some of their treaty views several times. Care in making treaties is one of the lessons that can hardly be lost after a few months practical experience.

During the last five years Congress has passed most of the dog days in Washington and the main subject has been tariff. The lot of a congressman would be happier if the people were allowed the protective system they voted for even last year.

World peace is making great progress. Overlooking the few remarks on arbitration made in the United States Senate last week, which were but straws to show the direction of the wind, we have but to look across the Atlantic to be convinced. France has appropriated $100,000,000 for the increase and reorganization of her army, and plans to spend $70,000,000 more for retaining with the colors for a third year the two-year men. This latter move means an increase of one-half in the strength of the active army, without materially decreasing the reserve. In other words, France, so far as the army is concerned, would be 50 per cent more ready for sudden war than she is now in the matter of the size of her army. The $100,000,000 is to be spent for equipment and efficiency.

Mr. Bryan has always had the fine quality of sticking fast to his friends. There have been times in his experience when this virtue has been carried almost to the point of being a vice, as when his influence long shielded, inside of his party, men who were abusing the powers of the Ways and Means Committee organized inside the National Democratic Committee to solicit funds to prevent the use of money in politics. He yielded then, only when both the proof and the pressure had become overwhelming. It is entirely natural for him to become the defender of Attorney General McReynolds when the attorney general is assailed as the friend of the elder Caminetti of California, who has long been the staunch friend and supporter of Mr. Bryan. Nothing less would be expected of Mr. Bryan by anybody familiar with times in Democratic party history when prestige was long used to shield the unworthiness of some of his friends.

The torpedo flotilla of the United States Navy, estimated to have cost $50,000,000 up to this time, and consisting of torpedo boat destroyers and submarines, is equipped with but one torpedo for each tube, and it takes a year to construct the one. What is called an automobile torpedo has a range of five miles and an explosive charge sufficient to destroy a dreadnaught. The mechanism of a fleet has become so extensive and varied that only a few nations are capable of building an up-to-date navy and of mastering its details. Sea fighting theories have been much developed since Japan overwhelmed the Russians in the last great naval battle. Warships are much larger and more costly, their armament more powerful and speed greater. Marksmanship has been improved to a scientific nicety, and in this abstruse art also but few nations can claim to be expert. War can still be made on land with primitive weapons by fighters as desperate as Arabs, but, internationally, on sea as well as land, it can be waged only by a small number of nations.

Admiral Dewey has done the country a great service by speaking plainly of the needs and functions of a navy in the advance copy of his address to be delivered Navy Day at Newport, July 2. One who reads his terse and strictly businesslike arguments can at once see that he is not arguing for military glory. He does not want great feats of arms to be performed on sea for the gratification of naval pride or national glory. There is a wide spread, common error as to the motives of naval and military men in advocating stronger preparation for national defense by land and sea, and particularly by sea. At best they are classed as impractical militarists. They are also accused of desiring to gain promotion. They are even charged with a desire for bringing on actual war for the same selfish purpose by those who wrongly imagine that preparation for war is an incentive to it, instead of a preventive. Admiral Dewey surely is not open to this charge. He is on the retired list and beyond the age of active service and of a rank than which there is none higher he could attain.

With 12,830 post offices receiving savings from 350,000 depositors amounting to $35,000,000, the postal saving bank is not proving a discredit to the Republican administration which introduced it.

Alexander Hamilton and James Madison had a hard fight to persuade the colonies to ratify the constitution. The opponents of the instrument may have regarded them as insidious lobbyists, but history does not call them by that name.

The State of Washington, under a recent law, can send to prison a lazy husband who fails to support his family, and then the wife is paid $1 a day from the county funds. A lazy bachelor is immune, but the Democratic income tax may catch him.

Col. Goethals says the Panama machinery will be too near worn out by the time the canal is completed to be useful in river improvement. But the knowledge gained is the main thing and will lead to other results on a like scale.

Several important changes in the tariff bill were agreed upon by the majority of the Senate Finance Committee chief among which referred to the character of the proposed income tax. It was decided that this tax should not be made operative prior to the time that the income tax amendment to the constitution was ratified and proclaimed, which was February 15, 1913. Also it was determined that the income tax law would apply to individual incomes over $3000, but would make important exemptions for municipalities, civic bodies and mutual insurance companies.

In the House Leader Mann of the Republican minority delivered a severe rebuke to the Wilson administration for its course in dealing with the California criminal prosecutions, and praised the course of McNab, the attorney who resigned when the cases were delayed by order of Attorney General McReynolds. Mann declared that manliness, such as he would have expected from President Wilson would have required him to ask McNab to withdraw his resignation and go on with the cases. He showed, how McNab has now published copies of the various warnings he sent to the attorney general.

Nine members of the currency commission of the American Bankers' Association met in New York the first of the week and formulated a set of suggestions for the amendment of the Glass-Owen bill. They raise several objections. One is that of governmental control of actual operations of the proposed system. All they want is supervision. Second, the bankers do not like the idea of having the government's credit placed behind the entire mass of the currency. Third, they do not like the dividing of the bank reserves between their own vaults and those of the reserve banks. Fourth, they do not like the plan for the retirement of the 2 per cent bonds.

Gov. Sulzer of New York now in open rebellion against the leaders or bosses of the Democratic party, which elected him to office, and with a Legislature in extra session voting against him on every issue, has taken the public into his confidence in a remarkable interview for the press. He declared he would never see Charles F. Murphy, the leader of this party, and boss of Tammany, and told how at his last visit to Murphy the boss had abused him and threatened him with political extinction if he refused to obey him about appointments to office and legislation. Then he said that Murphy had begun to dog him with detectives and had dug up all his past including a story of a Vermont perjury charge against Sulzer in a will trial. That story is denied point blank by the governor.

The visit of President Poincare to England has been an impressive formal event, but also marked by an unusually cordial popular feeling on the part of the British public. It is one of the puzzles of European history why two races located so near together should have grown upon prosperity and power on such divergent lines, but ethnography is full of puzzles. By crossing a narrow strip of salt water an Englishman finds himself in France or Ireland, and racially in a world distinct from his own. In the course of centuries England was overrun from France and, in turn, France by England, yet neither deprived the other of its own temperament and peculiar traits. They are not cast in the same mold, nor able to see life from the same points of view. Their caricatures of each other on the stage are one of the most amusing features of the drama. Though unable to fuse to any extent they have in late years overcome the old hostility in diplomatic affairs, and are getting along smoothly at this time in an entente unknown until Edward VI. ably brought it about.

The drunkard will have none of me. The heavy drinker says "no" when my name is mentioned. The man who craves rough---strong--- whiskey passes me by. All this is as it should be---as I myself would wish it. I am not for them.
