THE "CITY OF HOMER."

Reminders of the Ancient Architectural Glory of Smyrna,

Architecturally Smyrna must bave degenerated since the ancient days, for we are told that then the streets were broad and handsome, well paved and running at right angles with each other. There were a number of squares the friends who have been helping HAPPY CAMP, NETARTS and porticoes and public libraries, a museum, a stadium in which Olympic games were celebrated with great enthusiasm, a grand music hall or Odeon a Homerion and many temples, of which the most famous was that of the Olympian Jupiter, in which the reigning emperor was practically the god worshiped.

> The ancient Smyrniotes were inordinately proud of their city. They called it the "First of Asia," though the Ephesians violently disputed this claim. The inhabitants also called their city the "City of Homer," who they claimed had been born and brought up beside

The Only Safe Course.

There is a supreme court justice in New York city who is locally noted for his severity. If he can prevent it no guilty man shall escape, and in his court very few of them do.

Last fall a man was on trial before office of the county school superin- him for forgery. The prosecution, so failed to make out a very good case. Nevertheless the jury came in with a verdict of guilty.

Later the foreman of the jury was talking about the case with a friend who had heard some of the testimony.

"We weren't certain that we ought to convict either." said the foreman, in explanation, "but after listening to his honor's charge, all of us realized that if we acquitted that fellow we'd be guilty of contempt of court."-Saturday Evening Post.

Dangerous Dust.

Dust is more dangerous than draft. The dust of the house is more dangerous that the dust of the street. It is in dry, windy weather that colds, influenza, bronchitis, tonsilitis and consumption are caught. For every speck of dust is an aeroplane with an army of lisease germs as passengers. Sunlight destroys them; they thrive in darkness. The broom and duster of the housewife stir them up from their breeding places in dark recesses, and the open windows of the dusting hour blow them all about the house .- New York World.
