Special Communication
LOWEST IN THE CITY PRICES.

A well-known advertising manager in New York said recently:

"That there is too much bargain advertising, we all agree. But the question is this: Is there too much of bargains? No store is alive if it does not occasionally have real honest bargains, and not exactly doing the right thing if it does not share its profits with its customers."

This has been and will continue to be the policy of Stillwell's—"to sell merchandise of quality only"—goods that we personally stand back of—at prices not only consistently low, with good workmanship and material, but less than paid for inferior materials elsewhere.

We know that our customers will appreciate this, and we are always ready to present them the opportunities to save money, as shown on this page.

Here is advertised an extraordinary purchase of silks, instead of putting them on the shelf and selling them out gradually at enormous profits (like most stores), we are going to more than share the profits with you, "its fortunate for all of us," same as we are now doing on the Coats and Suits, by-the-way, with all that generous patronage in our Suit Department last week, there are plenty of beautiful, stylish garments here at great money saving opportunities.
