

Passing Remarks.

President Wilson spent all day Sunday working on the Mexican problem, keeping a sort of Mexican sabbath without any bullfights.

An African Methodist Episcopal bishop calls Booker T. Washington "the monumental beggar of the age." But Washington's solution of the race problem is proving its practicability.

William Sulzer was fortunate enough to fall from the executive chair into the very maelstrom of a local fight with Tammany. While Tammany was his undoing as a governor, it has been his salvation from complete oblivion.

The president, just at this time, is entitled to some exemptions. If he makes a mistake, we shall feel like attributing it to a condition of mind which can not come often in a man's life, and is now his for the first time. One of the daughters of his heart is to go out of his household and become the bride of another man. It is told of Thomas Corwin that when his daughter Helen married the later Judge Sage of Cincinnati, he was plunged, for a time, in a profound melancholy, which he could only explain, the match being as fine a one as it was, in love, fortune and prospect, by saying that he did not like to think of a daughter who had always loved him above all other men finding one she could love more.

A decorative fringe, springing either out of the mind of a reporter in the City of Mexico, or out of one of the many sources of misinformation to be found there, is the statement that Huerta will make, as part of his answer to Wilson's ultimatum, the statement that he is to increase the Mexican Army to 500,000 men. This absurd interjection weakens what is, no doubt, the true position of Huerta as set out in the rest of the dispatch. That position is one which has already been seen by many Americans. It is, in brief, that even if the United States could find international law to demand of Huerta that he vacate his office at once, and leave no successor, Huerta can find no Mexican law to warrant such action on his part.

A St. Louis clergyman says that "if the stage is to be our teacher we should demand the same standard of morals from the players that we demand from our public-school teachers and ministers." The point has often been raised. Rev. Charles M. Sheldon made it a condition of the dramatization of one of his stories that only Christian players should be in the cast. Mr. Sheldon, it will be recalled, once conducted a daily paper for a week as he thought Jesus would run a newspaper if now on earth. He did not insist on the same standard for the editorial staff and typographical force that he required of the players, probably out of fear that he could not try his experiment at all if he did. The peasants who perform the play at Oberammergau are said to approach this ideal of combining the character of the player with that of his role, severe as this is on the unfortunate individual who plays the part of Judas Iscariot.

The public has become acquainted with various suits for the alienation of affections, but the government has brought a criminal action of this character which is something novel. The United States grand jury at Lawton has returned an indictment charging several prominent citizens of Oklahoma with a conspiracy to alienate and destroy the confidence of the Osage trip of Indians in the Interior Department. Other indictments charge the same defendants with conspiracy to thwart a governmental policy or to interfere with the performance of a governmental function by the Interior Department. The latter charge is not new, since it was such an indictment that was returned against a former governor of Oklahoma growing out of alleged townsite transactions in Muskogee. But the bill charging alienation of confidence is something new under the sun or else it is so old that it appears new to this day and generation.

The "stringing up" of a convict in the Missouri Penitentiary by his hands for a period of eighteen days, on a diet of bread and water, in order to force a confession from him as to who furnished whisky and morphine found in his possession, shocks people of the twentieth century. It recalls stories of the dark ages when income tax collectors practiced forcible dentistry on individuals suspected of having hidden wealth. Sometimes hot pinners were used to extort the desired information. And the diet of bread and water was not overlooked. If the inquisitors of that time had been criticised on the score of inhumanity they would probably have replied: "What are you going to do with a fellow who obstinately refuses to tell anything?" The reply is like that of the Penitentiary warden. The public should not be severe in criticism of jailors and wardens. They have many difficult problems. When a man is in prison and he still has a rebellious spirit it requires more than ordinary ingenuity to handle him. There must be discipline inside a prison.

There is talk of a regular supply of refrigerated beef from Argentina, and as it may come in free of duty its cost can no longer be heaped upon the tariff. The supply in Argentina is ample, standing in government reports at 30,000,000 cattle, and 68,000,000 sheep. Its cattle ranch area is enormous, and all who journey up its great rivers, which ships may ascend, are struck by the low price of beef obtained by those who raise it. Yet only 50,000,000 acres are under cultivation in a total of 728,000,000 suitable for pasture or raising crops. Argentina is decidedly expensive. Next to Paris the City of Buenos Ayres contains the largest population of Latin descent. The immigration to Argentina is 250,000 a year. Nearly a third of the present population are Italians, an industrious race. A temperate climate promotes business enterprise. There will be plenty of room for new cattle growers for the next century, and the facilities for distribution of products are unusually good.

The Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce are both taking an active part in arousing the people of the United States to the threatened beef famine in this country. One shows that both our beef herds and dairy herds have fallen off in number in the past three years, accompanied by a large rise in price of live stock at the market, and a much larger rise in the retail price of meat. The other parallels this by showing that our exports of beef and beef cattle, only a few years ago amounting to many millions a year, have fallen to less than one of those millions, and that imports, but recently almost negligible in the total of our trade, have increased until they are five times as large as our exports. We have practically ceased to export beef, and have become a large importer of it. From the consumer's point of view this might not seem so serious, were it not for two closely related facts. One is that this change has been accompanied by a heart-breaking increase in the price of meat on the consumer's table, and the other is that the prospects for increasing the imports sufficiently to prevent further rise are not good.

Boulder Creek.

Mr. Alex Johnson of Portland, has moved his family to the Krake place, which he bought recently.

Marion Chance, of Long Prairie, has been helping his brother-in-law Hiram Smith, for the past week.

We were much surprised to see Ed. Hadley of Tillamook in our neighborhood Monday, with his invincible Ford. We are prepared now to believe his assertion that his car can do anything except climb a tree, for a machine that can plow through the mud between this place and Beaver, is certainly some auto.

L. D. Krake has moved his family to the Turk house on Wolf Creek, for the winter, as he was unable to find an empty house in Beaver.

The Helping Hand Society met with Mrs. C. N. Johnson last week.

A 10 lb. baby girl arrived at H. A. Chopard's Tuesday, Nov. 4th, via the Stork Express. Gus says he is a thousand dollars better off than he was before.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hester and little daughters Inez and Marian of Hemlock were guests at the Chopard home last Sunday, week.

A Grange was organized at the Margarell hall, last Saturday afternoon, with about thirty members. We have not heard who are the officers.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Smith, their little daughter Florence, and M. T. Chance of Long Prairie, spent last Thursday evening at H. A. Chopard's.

Storage to Feed Armies.

According to figures in possession of the Dairy and Food Department there were in cold storage in Pennsylvania on October 1 last 10,664,861 dozens of eggs, more than enough to feed an army. Added to this there were 10,445,790 pounds of butter. Of eggs not in the shell there were stored 239,821 pounds.

Of fish the middlemen had in store 3,341,487 pounds. Of poultry there was 743,772 pounds, which accounts in part for the high prices of chickens, turkeys, ducks and other fowl.

Despite the fact that game is forbidden to be sold in this state, except at certain times, there are 17,477 pounds in cold storage.

There are 32,325 carcasses of beef, 11,222 of veal, 142,596 of sheep and 1275 of hogs. Of parts of carcasses not classified there are 376,136 of beef, 11,343 of veal, 30,285 of sheep and 576,217 of hogs.
