Working Girls and Morality.

In contrast with the wave of hysteria that swept the country a few months ago during the inquiry into the wages paid girls in the stores of the various cities, is the sane statement of Miss Lois Cornforth, investigator for the Board of Public Welfare at Kansas City, that morality should not figure in the demand for wages. She says that when the demand has such a basis it casts unfounded reflections on working girls. She gives it as her conclusion that wages count little in the morals of girls who work, her investigations showing not one tenth of the girls who get into trouble are working girls or were working girls at the time their delinquency began.

Recent investigations of cases of delinquency among women in Chicago support Miss Cornforth's conclusions. The gathering of statistics on the subject is attended with difficulties, for the delinquent naturally seeks to deal as leniently with herself as possible. But even when the statements of delinquents are accepted without investigation of antecedents, the percentage of immorality traceable to lack of a living wage is extremely small. Love of finery and rich living is a far more prolific cause of immorality. Hasty and early marriages, with speedy separations, have made the descent easy and swift to many young women. The number of girls who have gone to the cities from villages and rural communities to hide their disgrace and save their parents from embarrassment must be large. The cities have this supply added to their own normal production of erring girls, probably larger because of the opportunities in the city to elude the vigilance of parents and neighbors.

The question of wages economic and the assumption that a low wage to girls implies immorality is a gross injustice to thousands of working girls of spotless character. Two reasons for low wages are superficially obvious: Many girls work for pin money and live at home, while many others are not efficient. The suggestion of a minimum wage by statutory compulsion offers no panacea, aside from the legal difficulties. The inefficient employees would not be paid more than their services are really worth. If they were it would be tantamount to compelling employers to contribute charity to employees. A partial solution would be the increasing of efficiency among employees and such a readjustment as would better distribute the wagers. Some pursuits are crowded while others clamor for workers. The statistics of Chicago delinquents showed the greatest number, even twenty times that of former clerks, had formerly been domestic servants. The domestic servant is sure of a living, but the life is not attractive. For this fact there is a division of responsibility between employer and employe, and the financial aspect of it is the least significant. All the complexities of human nature enter into the problem. It can not be solved by passing a law.

Delinquent Tax List of Last Half Payments, 1913.

This advertised list of delinquent taxes for the year of 1913, is in pursuance of an act of the State Legislature which is embodied in Chapter 275 of the GENERAL LAWS OF THE 1911 SESSION.

The taxes on the following advertised real property, situated in Tillamook County, Oregon, became delinquent on Monday, October 7th, 1913, and are subject to a penalty of 12 per cent, per annum from Monday, April 7th, 1913, until they shall have been paid, any day after the expiration of six months after the taxes charged against the following real property are delinquent, the Sheriff is authorized upon demand of any person making application, to issue to them a certificate of delinquency, upon payment of taxes, penalty, interest and cost of advertising. Certificates of delinquency shall bear interest from the date of issuance until redeemed at the rate of fifteen per cent per annum.

ROSENBERG BROS.

The Crown That Fell.
Superstitious folks find their belief in omens strengthened by an incident which occurred at the wedding of the Empress Eugenie of France many years ago. After the ceremony the emperor and his bride entered the coach, that was surmounted by an imperial crown and gilded and adorned with paintings. This coach had been built for the wedding of Napoleon I. and Marie Louise a number of decades before. Just as the coach began to move forward the crown fell from the roof of the coach to the ground. The eight horses were at once halted, the crown was picked up, and in some fashion or other set in place again. Napoleon thrust his head out of the window to learn what had caused the halt, and when informed of the accident by Count Fleury said that it reminded him of an anecdote which he would tell him some other time. "But," remarks Fleury in his memoirs, "I knew it already. A virtually identical accident occurred to the coach at the marriage of Marie Louise."

Ancient Game of Football.
Football is probably the oldest of England's national games. At Derby a game of football was played as early as the third century in commemoration of victory over the Roman legion at Chester. The first football used in the annual game—still played each Easter—is said to have been the head of a Danish invader. In the Isle of Purbeck, too, the free quarrymen from time immemorial have perpetuated their claim to a grant of land by kicking a football across it. In the fourteenth century the game was so popular as to call forth an edict forbidding it, on the ground that it interfered with the practice of more martial exercises. In later times Shakespeare referred contemptuously to the game, but perhaps few would be able to turn up readily the passage in "King Lear" describing "a base football player."—London Standard.

Chinese Porcelain.
The Chinese have a national art in the production of porcelain. Not until the time of Palissy and Wedgwood can Europe be said to have entered into rivalry with the best works of China. But an enormous difference separates the work of China and Europe. Chinese work in porcelain represents ideals, symbolic usages and perhaps allegories, which have their counterpart in the medieval stained glass to be seen in many of the oldest cathedrals. While these are religious and attempt to embody in colors on a flat ground regardless of light and shade, but in symbolic colors, incidents in the lives of real personages or symbolic conventions associated with religious ceremonies or ideas, Chinese decorative art appeals to a sense of beauty in a manner that would have been appreciated by the ancient Greeks.

Terminology of the Lie.
Mr. Lloyd-George, with Celtic directness, calls it "a lie." The Saxon prefers a periphrasis. Mr. Churchill's "terminological inexactitude" has become a classic, though Mr. Barry Pain did rather well with "mendacious diathesis." The parliamentary evasion is the most polite, for when "the honorable member opposite has been gravely misinformed" the compliment implied is frequently too subtle to carry across the floor of the house. The "Autocrat" defined the lie when he said, "The devil has many tools, but a lie is the handle which fits them all." Mark Twain's definition is equally neat. "A lie," he said, "is an abomination unto the Lord, but a very present help in time of trouble."—London Spectator.

Gladstone's Taste in Sermons.
Gladstone, who never omitted attending service twice every Sunday, had his own idea of what a sermon should be like and the effect it should have upon its hearers. Sir Algernon West records that one morning, coming from the Chapel Royal, the G. O. M. "exclaimed against a very beautiful sermon of Mr. White's, of the Saroy, 'because,' he said, 'he has excited my brain by his quotations and given me anything but the rest which is what I want and expect to find in church.'"

Food For a Poet.
"I have a vague but persistent yearning for something," murmured the poet—a constant yearning for something, I know not what."
"Maybe it's tripe," suggested the sympathetic landlady. "We haven't had any in a long time."—Washington Herald.

Military Gymnasts.
Japanese soldiers are nearly all gymnasts and every barrack has a gymnasium. So well trained are they that in less than half a minute they can scale a wall fourteen feet high by simply leaping on each other's shoulders, one man sustaining two or three others.

Telescopes and Forest Fires.
Forest officers have found that high power telescopes are not always satisfactory in fire lookout work. In some localities heat vibrations in the atmosphere are so magnified by the glass that clearer vision can be had with the unaided eyes.

Cigar Boxes.
The construction of a cigar box may seem to be a very simple matter to the novice, but the box passes through nineteen processes before it is ready to receive the cigar.

Seeking to establish himself, the true man establishes others; wishing to enlarge himself, he enlarges others.—Confucius.
