

LONDON "PEA SOUP."

Mists and Fogs So Thick That They Turn Day Into Night. London and Londoners have been the butt of many a good joke, but perhaps the oldest subject of the humorist is the London fog.

In November, 1690, John Evelyn made a note in his diary to the effect that there was "so thick a mist and fog that people lost their way in the streets, it being so intense that no light of candle or torches yielded any direction.

Visitors to London in those days were in the habit of making fun of the fog just as the visitors of today. Condemara, Spanish ambassador in Queen Elizabeth's time, said to a friend who was returning to Spain, "My compliments to the sun, whom I have not seen since I came to England."

In Elizabeth's time the burning of coal was prohibited while parliament was in session. So dense were the fogs during the years of 1813 and 1814 that when the prince regent tried to make his way to Hatfield, the home of Lord Salisbury, he could not find his way and was compelled to forego the trip and return to Carlton House.

A WIZARD IN MEMORY.

Scott Could Retain In His Mind Anything He Heard Once.

To his rare good fellowship and his powers of endurance Scott added one other quality, without which his vigorous search for literary material might have been of little use—namely, a most extraordinary memory, which enabled him to retain what he heard and use it many years afterward.

"While we three sat down on the brink of a river," says Hogg, "Scott desired me to sing them my ballad of 'Gliman's Clough.' Now he remembered that this ballad had never been printed. I had merely composed it by rote and on finishing it three years before had sung it over once to Sir Walter. I began it at his request, but at the eighth or ninth stanza I stuck in it and could not get on with another verse, on which he began it again and recited it every word from beginning to end.

"It being a very long ballad, consisting of eighty-eight stanzas. I testified my astonishment, knowing that he had never heard it but once and even then did not appear to be paying particular attention. He said he had been out with a pleasure party as far as the opening of the Firth of Forth and to amuse the company he had recited that ballad and one of Southey's ('The Abbot of Aberbrothok'), both of which ballads he had heard only once from their respective authors, and he believed he recited them both without misplacing a word."—From Charles S. Oelcott's "The Country of Sir Walter Scott."

Light In a Bookstore.

With many others, I have complained of the ignorance of the bookshop assistants. They are apparently so busied in distributing literature that they have no time to read it. The other day I went into my usual "bookseller's and news agent's" with a usual demand and the extra one, for I had mislaid my copy of the "Apocrypha," a volume always had to obtain. "And have you the 'Apocrypha,' please?" The courteous young lady thought, glanced around. "Let me see," she said. "Is it a weekly or a monthly?"—London Chronicle.

Precept and Practice.

The Rev. S. E. Koble tells a good "precept and practice" story. The successor to the living of Charles Kingsley went all over the country preaching sanitation, his own rectory was found to be in an unhabitable condition, owing to the churchyard draining beneath the drawing room. The succeeding rector had therefore to build a new rectory and lost faith in social reformers.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Ever Faithful.

"Henry, I believe you are like all the men. When I give you letters to mail you think it's a good joke to carry them for days and days in your pocket."

When Clouds Were Dark.

Bill—Oh, yes, I know old Jackson. He was a good sort. He did a very kind action once for me when the clouds were dark and threatening and the world looked so black. Sid—What did he do? Bill—He lent me an umbrella.—London Mail.

His Daily Slaughter.

"Young Muchcash must think that time has more lives than a cat."

LIFE IN ICELAND.

It is Not the Crude Existence That Many People Imagine.

Most people think of the Icelanders as being like Eskimos, a crude, unenlightened people, looking more like animals than people and living in snow huts, dressed in furs, whereas the Icelanders are handsome, cultured people, highly educated, with fair faces and brilliant eyes and a very dainty fashion of dressing.

As to their diet. It is somewhat wanting in variety on account of the lack of many food staples, but all their dishes have a certain odd richness that is very delicious to a stranger. It is largely because of the amount of oil they use. They cook many things in oil—a clear, sweet fish oil, though substituting olive oil makes the dishes quite as tempting.

Their own products are fish in vast quantities; lamb, the chief meat; eggs, wild ducks, sheep's milk, cheese and butter; turnips, of which they raise and eat more than of any other vegetable; potatoes, onions and beans, and occasionally peas; spinach, cabbage and Brussels sprouts; no fruit to speak of and rarely any beef—it is imported from Denmark and Scotland. Pork is rarely eaten and then in the form of imported bacon.

But out of this meager list of staples they evolve some truly delicious dishes, for the island people are all good cooks and have a native knack that is like the French. They can make anything they cook taste good, no matter what the ingredients may be.—London Family Herald.

NITROGEN IS A LOAFER.

This Gas Is Too Lazy to Do a Thing Except "Being Around."

Nitrogen in its normal condition—as it occurs in the air we breathe, of which it forms over 75 per cent—is a singularly lazy member of the family of elements. The average human loafer is ambitious by contrast. He will at least whittle a stick by way of occupation and scramble up with some alacrity if asked to "have something."

Nitrogen gas just puts in its time "being around." And it doesn't do anything else. No ordinary stimulus can stir it to action. We breathe in gallons of it every day, but we breathe it all out again absolutely unchanged except that it is a little warmer. And this despite the fact that the body has to have a regular supply of nitrogen and that we spend much money on expensive food to get it.

In the outer world, too, elements of all sorts go wandering by, and nitrogen sits like a dummy uninterested and quite unresponsive to any advances they may make. To be sure, a few years ago the industrial chemists succeeded, by using powerful electric currents, in winking up the atmospheric nitrogen, and now there are several large factories in which nitrogen activated in this way is being turned into explosives and fertilizers. But in the laboratory and on the street it has continued to be the inert element par excellence.

In view of the very important part that nitrogen combined plays in the world, chemists, with the necessary idealism to make them great, have long suspected that if just the right conditions could be provided this indifference of nitrogen to its fellow elements would disappear.—New York Post.

Frugality.

The daughter of a southern congressman had recently been a bridesmaid at the marriage of a college chum. On her return home she was telling the family, including the old colored mammy, of the ceremony. "And just think, Aunt Comfort," she finished, "the bride wore the lace veil that had belonged to her great-grandmother!"

"Law, Miss Sidney, chille!" exclaimed mammy in tones of horror. "That sholy am one saving fambly!"—Judge.

Rough on the Plumbers.

"Are there any plumbers in heaven, dad?" asked a small boy. The gentleman addressed had just received a "small" bill from one of the plumbing fraternity as he answered promptly and emphatically: "No, my boy. Certainly not! But what made you ask?"

"I thought there couldn't be, because the sky leaks such a lot."—London Tatler.

Expected Reduction.

Grandpa Macpherson—How many do two and two make, Donald? Donald—Six. Grandpa—What are you talking about? Two and two make four Donald—Yes, I know, but I thought you'd "beat me down" a bit.—London Punch.

Punishment.

"Pop!" "Yes, my son." "Did mamma ever punish you?" "Well, she married me, my boy."—Yonkers Statesman.

Wasted Effort.

"Few of us get credit for our effort." "True. I spent most of yesterday afternoon in an effort to get credit for a month's supply of groceries."—Buffalo Express.

To the Voters of Tillamook County, all Parties.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for County Judge, and, if nominated and elected, and of course I will be, I stand squarely on this platform as the oldest resident of Tillamook County, having come here when Mount Hobo was a hole in the ground and Necarney mountain was not yet sprouted. I will see that the timber men pay all taxes, relieving the farmers, so that all they will have to do is to pull teats and reduce the price of butter fat, reduce the wages of the hired man, sell all the road machinery and fill the ruts with moss, raise the fishing licence to $15.00 a year and do away with all game wardens. Look after my salary, etc. Now what more can a man do?

C. E. REYNOLDS. P.S.—I will make the Mayor move his office from the side walk.

To the Voters of Tillamook County.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for the office of County Clerk, for re-election, subject to the Republican Primaries to be held May 1914.

Very respectfully, J. C. HOLDEN.
