THE TILLAMOOK HEADLIGHT.

Editorial Snap Shots.

It is estimated it will cost about $100 per mile to oil roads in Tillamook county. That is a very small amount of money, and, besides, it is a matter of economy.

"They are all doing it!" "Doing what?" Raising the price of everything on account of the war. That don't coincide with the policy of the Democratic party, for it promised to bring down the cost of living.

Several hunters hiked into Tillamook city a day or so ago, with their packs and guns, and they could hardly believe it that nearly all of Europe was at war. That proves that the people are living in a fast age.

We are wondering whether our rural mail carrier will have to provide a feeding bottle for babies, as he is packing babies by parcel post. Should merril be detected pumping the dairymen's cows on his route, they will know it is to fill the feeding bottle.

"Boost a man and he will forget it in ten minutes. Knock him and he will remember it for ten years," says one of our exchanges. There is a good deal of gospel truth in this, as every editor can testify to. There are some "Sore heads" in Tillamook whom we have boosted who act just like that. But no one cares a whoop, whether they are sore or not.

We seem to recall a prophecy by Prince Bismarck: "The hot headed Crown Prince will involve Germany in a great war." The Crown Prince was Emperor William, who has had an idea that he can whip the whole world. Perhaps he can. But, perhaps he can't. If he can't, off comes his crown and Germany will become a republic and throw off the one man power.

Germany and England had both entered into an agreement that Belgium should be neutral, and it was an agreement that was binding upon one nation as the other. While Germany was endeavoring to enter into another agreement with England, it had already decided to throw overboard its agreement about Belgium and rush its troops through that country, which was violating the obligation and honor.

Bro. Trombley is posing as a free trade Democrat and Prohibitionist. This is certainly a curious combination, when our respected brother is advocating state wide prohibition and Free Trade Chamberlain. That kind of logic is enough to make the Democratic mule bray. Well, our contemporary is somewhat of a public monstrosity any way, for it was lined up with the Progressive ghost not many moons since.

There are those that believe that the war in Europe is going to be a good thing for the United States, while others take an opposite view. There is not the least doubt but what the war will stagnate the industrial world in Europe, and it will also have some effect on the industries of this country. But when it comes to food-stuffs there will be a greater demand for this, which will help the producer but come harder to the consumer.

There are those who believe, and do so honestly, that the liquor traffic is the greatest evil on earth. We do not coincide with them. The liquor traffic is only a drop in the bucket compared to the awful war raging in Europe. What with the enormous cost of preparing for war, maintaining enormous armies and navies, and death and destruction that follows a blood thirsty war, it looks hardly creditable in these days of civilization and boasted Christianity that nations are so ready to clash and carry on a war for aggrandizement. And, worse still, when a few crowned heads of Europe have the power to plunge their countries into war, is we believe something that our temperance friends should consider when they believe the liquor traffic is the worse curse to mankind.

We do not know of any thing more important for the Tillamook Commercial Club to take hold of and discuss than a deep channel from the bay to this city. It is of vital importance to the central part of the county and to the lumbering and dairy interests. It is not generally known, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the Steamer Sue H. Elmore is instrumental in saving the dairymen in the neighborhood of about $1,000 annually in carrying cheese out at a low figure and bringing in feed at a low cost, which they would have to pay should the steamer be taken off the run between here and Portland on account of the channel filling up between this city and the bay. This is a good live subject to discuss, not only for the Commercial Club, but for the Grangers and other organizations. Surely there should be some plan devised whereby every interest can combine and amicably agree to this very essential improvement. Lumber schooners would be coming to this city today if the channel was of sufficient depth to allow them. The cost of this improvement is insignificant to a large amount of commerce it would bring to the central part of the county. There is no assurance that the Sue H. Elmore will be kept on the route, and in that event we are inclined to think that the dairymen would be the first to complain about the additional cost of shipping cheese and feed stuffs.

We have been asked by both the "wets" and the "drys" whether the snap shot man will support state wide prohibition. The political fight at the approaching general election is a battle royal between Republicans and Democrats, or, in other words, the voters will be called upon to cast their ballots for Republicans who believe in and advocate protection for American products, and Democrats who have brought about free trade. This is the issue that concerns everybody in Tillamook County, especially the dairymen, fishermen, mill men, etc., for everything produced in this county is placed in competition with the cheap labor of Europe and Asia. It is in this fight that the snap shot man will exert his energies, and use his ammunition. Voters have been side tracked in Oregon so many years by political agitators who advocated the Oregon System, Statement No. 1, the sovereign rule of the people, and the introduction of so many laws that have increased taxation, made more soft jobs for office seekers, and without bringing about better conditions for the people. For this and other reasons, the snap shot man is not going to be side tracked on state wide prohibition, because he is not a prohibitionist. Another thing, when we see state wide prohibition advocates advocating the reelection of Senator Chamberlain we do not propose to get into such a muck and mix-up like that. We will stay with the G. O. P. which we believe will give the Democratic party a bad drubbing this fall.

Dream of Universal Peace.

The dream of universal peace is not new. Seven centuries before the birth of Jesus the prophet Micah predicted a time when "they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." From that time to this poets, philosophers, many statesmen and even some soldiers have raised their voices against war. In our own country Franklin declared that there had never been a good war or a bad peace. Gen. Grant, who will rank with the great captains of history, told a friend he hoped to be remembered longest by his share in the treaty of Washington, which he believed was an epochal stride in the direction of universal peace. "Let us have peace" was one of the most striking utterances of this great soldier. We have never had a president with perhaps a single exception, who did not shun war in theory as well as practice.

England and the United States have been especially active in the cause of international peace through arbitration. For ninety-nine years their numerous disputes have been settled amicably. The first half of the nineteenth century only thirty international difficulties were settled by arbitration, most of these being between England and the United States. This success impressed other countries, and before the century closed there had been 200 such cases. During the last decade of the century there were six cases a year. The remarkable fact is that, while these questions were a multitude of issues of a character that had plunged nations into armed conflict in the past, not a single award of a board of arbitration was rejected. By the century's close twenty-six powers had become parties to the Permanent International Court of Arbitration at The Hague. The Hague court now sits in the Palace of Peace, a court-house of its own, decided last year. At last reports its docket contained 300 cases of more or less importance, affecting many nations.

Germany Could Not Stop.

Germany's startling declaration of war against Great Britain merely means that the kaiser feels that he must carry out his plans on original lines if it takes all summer and he has to fight the rest of Europe. A German answer to British ultimatum demand of assurances of intention to respect the neutrality of Belgium could not be evasive. It could carry renewed assurances against a permanent or temporary occupation of the country, a disclaimer of any other purpose than that of using it as a highway for moving troops to points of action along the French frontier, and a pledge of restored neutrality after the termination of hostilities. But that such an answer would not satisfy Great Britain was made entirely clear in Sir Edward Grey's address to Parliament on Monday, in which it was stated, in substance, that such proposals had already been made by Germany, and rejected. The complete recognition of the neutrality of Belgium soil, or the avowal of a purpose not to recognize it, would offer the only basis of reply to such an ultimatum.

In an interesting and able discussion of the situation by Admiral Mahan, which appeared yesterday, the kaiser's position was condemned from the point of view of responsibility for the war, emphasis being put upon the obvious fact that Austria would not have taken a course so offensive to Russia without his advice and concurrence. And the equally unassailable opinion is expressed that the German campaign against France can already be seen to be one of such "impetuous momentum" as to close a fixed purpose" as to overwhelm France, as not only the possible, but probable ally of Russia, without waiting for a declaration of war. That view is fortified by all of the evidence available, and a necessary part of such a view, we think, is that plan of campaign, carefully made in advance, can now not be abandoned without such possible danger of disorganization as to threaten its defeat. The kaiser may have been, and probably was, sincere in the offered pledge to recognize Belgian neutrality after the emergency making it necessary for him to violate it, is past. That position is untenable, from the world point of view. Such calm ignoring of a treaty and the obligation it imposes upon the government he is urging to ignore for his accommodation is possibly only to consummate soldier who has contemplated such a violation in making the military plans he is now bent upon putting in execution. How far he might be willing to go in defying yet another power than the two with which he was already engaged, because a vital question from the moment the British ultimatum was sent.
