Those Fresh Air Kiddies are having a grand time in Tillamook, thanks to the kind hearted people who are caring for them.

Is there a taxpayer in Tillamook County who can show us where the Oregon System has helped lower their taxes, or improved conditions?

Every body seems to have an idea that they can raise the price of manufactured articles and food stuffs these days. Pity the poor consumer. But it is next to robbery to do so.

In the Franco-German war in 1870, the French claimed several small victories at first, but when the German army started on the war path it did not stop until Paris surrendered. Will history repeat itself?

The Nehalem Valley Reporter has changed hands, H. F. Effenberger having leased the plant to M. A. Hamilton, late of the Bay City Examiner. We wish the new editor success and that the Reporter will become a strong factor in the up-building of that part of the county.

We think that it was the proper stunt and etiquette to place the name of the Mayor of the city on the program for a short address of welcome to the Artisans on Saturday. There would have been some excuse to "knock" had someone else been designated to fill the Mayor's proper function.

The fire wardens are doing good service in Tillamook County, and we are glad to find that the general sentiment all over the county with the citizens is to help the fire wardens, and not to set out fire. It is a critical time just now, and will continue to be until the fall rains start, for Tillamook County, owing to the dry weather this summer. Should the wind go to the east and continue in that direction for several days, it will cause everything to dry up and become like tinder. We want to impress upon the citizens at this time to use every precaution to prevent fires from getting started, as it is hard to tell when a forest or other fire get started, where it is going to end and whose property will be destroyed. Thus far this county has been exceedingly fortunate in not having a forest fire, and with due diligence and good horse sense on the part of the citizens, we hope this county will avoid a destructive conflagration.

The Oregon System is a great weapon in the hands of political agitators and those who advocate class legislation. Those who thought that the Oregon System would cure many ills and reduce taxation begin to realize that they were laboring under a delusion, for instead of doing so they have come to the conclusion that many vicious laws are being passed and that taxation is on the increase. The political cranks are still on the job. Read carefully the second eight hour law that, no doubt, will pass and become a law at the November election.

That it shall constitute a criminal offense, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, for any person, firm, company or corporation, or his, her, or their foreman, overseer, superintendent, manager, or any other agent, to employ, in the state of Oregon, any man, woman, boy or girl, for more than eight hours in any one calendar day, or more than 48 hours in any one calendar week. By this law, employment for eight hours in any calendar day shall be confined to nine consecutive hours, allowing one hour for eating and rest. The period of nine consecutive hours with eight hours for work therein, and one hour for eating and rest, shall, by the provisions of the law, be identical for each, any and every calendar day, of each, any and every calendar week.

"This law and the provisions thereof, shall apply, with equal force, to each, any and every person, man, woman, boy or girl, employed for pay, remuneration, profit or compensation of any kind whatsoever, in any and every business, trade, or profession, including homes and farms."

"By this law neither manual labor, trades nor the professions shall be exempted, but every form of labor, skilled or unskilled, as well as every trade and profession, and persons working therein or under, shall be included in, by and under this law, within the state of Oregon."

Army Officers Muzzled.

Such as it may fret active and retired army and navy officers, there is wisdom in President Wilson's suggestion that they refrain from publicly discussing either the military or the political situation in Europe. This will be genuine deprivation. When a man has made war a trade and has spent a lifetime in the study of military and naval problems it requires much self restraint to keep from giving his expert opinion at a time when everybody is eager to listen. They may still talk to their friends in the sacred precincts of the club, but that is not like sowing their views featured in the newspapers, to be read by all America. Later they may publish books, but the recent criticism of Admiral Dewey's autobiography, because of certain statements made as to events at Manila shows that even this is dangerous.

There are two reasons why the president's warning is timely. The most obvious is that expressions by American officers might take on a color of military or political criticism offensive to nations with which we are on amicable terms. Nations, as individuals, are inclined to be more irritable when engaged in warfare. Each combatant will be quick to see in any criticism by individuals in official place an evidence of the real ill-tidude of America. Resentment will not be temporary. There is no other bitterness quite as lasting as that one feels toward a presumed neutral person openly and abetting the enemy or feigning sympathy with him in time of strife. An individual will nurse such a recollection for a lifetime and a nation will not forget it for generations. Another reason is the pain that such discussions will bring to many of our own citizens. Blood is thicker than water and it would be unnatural in our foreign-born citizens and residents if they did not side with the land of their birth in the present crisis.

In 1913 we had in America 13,343,488 white persons of foreign birth. We also had 18,000,663 native white persons of foreign parentage. The two classes together comprised at that time 35.1 per cent of our total population. A large percentage of them come from the various countries now involved in the European struggle. A decent regard for their feelings should be shown. The military officers have chafed under some of the new restrictions on their utterances. Some of them have appeared rather severe, for even a soldier has his views and feels that he should be given some individual rights. But in a crisis like the present the wisdom of gag rule is beyond question. However fair and impartial the officers may intend to be and however accurately they may describe conditions their utterances will be irritating to vast bodies of our own citizens and to foreign nations. This fact might be profitably born in mind even by persons who have no official responsibility.

Handling the War News.

Handling the news of the war is a difficult and expensive undertaking. The present European war situation has given rise to unusual difficulties. The press associations have correspondents at every European capital, working night and day. They have correspondents with each army. They have access to the news service of the daily newspapers of Europe. They keep in touch with the chiefs of the army and navy of every country involved in the present conflict. But the military censorship has been the most rigorous known since the invention of the telegraph and cable and it has been impossible to evade it. When the censorship is restricted to the suppression of military secrets the knowledge of which would be advantageous to the enemy, it is necessary and proper. But the censor is sole judge of the scope of his operations and he often extends it to include reports of battles. The correspondent who attempts to evade the censor by smuggling his dispatches out of the country runs the risk of summary expulsion. But in the present instance there is no method of eluding the censor, since all dispatches must be handled by cable and at present all cables from Europe must pass under the eye of the British censor, the cable to Germany having been severed. The dispatches from Berlin and Vienna must run this official gauntlet.

That the correspondents are doing their best may be taken for granted. Each has been trained from his youth up to give the news, the whole news and nothing but the news, without color. Every correspondent worthy of connection with a recognized news agency or employment as special representative of a first-class newspaper follows these instructions with fidelity. It is a matter of conscience with him, even as it is the condition of retaining his position. The correspondent who "fakes" loses professional standing and is soon without employment or the possibility of it. His position is insecure even if he is too easily imposed upon. Anybody who is at all familiar with newspaper making knows that the correspondents are doing faithful work. They are not sending out intentionally false information.

Root Plays Democratic Party.

Saratoga, N. Y., August 18—Addressing the New York Republican State Convention which met here today under the novel conditions of being without power to nominate a candidate for office, since the new primary laws calls for their selection by the voters of the party at the primary election on September 28, United States Senator Elihu Root, the temporary chairman of the convention, pointed out the most essential factors which might lead to Republican success this Fall.

It is, as he noted, the first time in 18 years that the Republican party of the state comes to the election of its state government and its national representatives as the party of opposition both in the state and nation. The party was about to appeal, he said, to the voters of the state not only for a judgment on the conduct of the government by the Democratic party at Albany, but also in Washington.

He charged that since the Democratic party took possession of the national government a year and a half ago, with a programme "by which they propose to set free every American from the incubus of too great success by others, to reduce the cost of living, and to give new life and prosperity to American production and commerce," it has failed.

He took up particularly the experiments with the tariff, which he asserted had been carried out in a spirit of hostility to American industry and suggested that "perhaps the time has now come when the American people are ready again to try the protective system upon its merits and to call for legislation inspired by a spirit of friendliness toward American industry."

He likewise attacked the Democratic programme in relation to the financial system and the control of trusts and corporations. He remarked that eight months had passed since the banking and currency act became a law, and the delay in putting this into operation, together with the proposed legislation against trusts and corporations, had had an ill effect on the country.

The spirit of the dominant party, he said in dealing with these business problems, impressed the enterprise of the country, "with a sense that the government is hostile."

His estimate of the Progressive movement he reflected as follows: "In the controversy with the Democratic party, the Republican party stands alone. The threat of a third party, which alarmed so many Republicans two years ago and still vexed us one year ago has practically disappeared. It is now plain that it never had any real substance apart from the powerful personality of Mr. Roosevelt."
