

Uncle Silas Says.

If you need more phosphorus in your system, listen to the men of science, who say that pumpkin pie is what you need. The humble pumpkin is more than thirty-three per cent phosphorus, while the lordly apple is only 15 per cent. And the winter squash contains about the same amount of phosphorus as the pumpkin. Therefore if you want to shine in the world eat pumpkin and squash and you'll get there with both feet.

The garden was designed as the most suitable abode for man and woman. Our Creator placed Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, surrounded with all the beauty and sublimity of nature. But they let the weeds and the serpents thrive, and they finally caused the owners to be driven out. There are still people who let weeds grow in their gardens and not a few abandon the garden because of the weeds.

Grease is cheaper than horses, yet many who use wagons overlook greasing the axels at the proper time. Heavy wagons must often be used on rough roads, and when it happens that the matter of greasing the wagon has been overlooked the horses are made to do perhaps double work.

If you want to learn about horses you must learn from horses," is an old saying and a good one. A man to be successful must be with horses and a close observer of their moods, manners and make-up. A colt should be trained from the first moment he is helped to his feet. If taught to yield early to man's restraint and guidance he will never need "breaking". To follow his master's wishes will be second nature. Never speed a colt too young, and when he is given speed permit it for short spurts only as he can bear it.

Because an individual cow is a good producer, it is not safe to buy her calf for a good producer unless she have a line of producing ancestors on both sides behind her. Not every cow descends from good producing ancestors is herself a good producer, but she is much more likely to be than if selected in any other way, and this probability has a money value.

After all, many of our despised weeds are useful to the farmer. Even sweet clover is a splendid renovator, and a good pasture plant for hogs. Most farm animals will eat it when it is young and tender, and it can be kept so by the hogs and the mowers. It also chokes out other weeds. Try some of it in a jimson or sunflower patch.

When we consider that large portion of the cow's body is composed of water; that milk contains more water than any other one ingredient, and that it must require a great quantity of water to keep the temperature of the animal down during extremely hot weather, we should realize how necessary it is to keep her well supplied with pure drinking water.

Horses sleep but little—usually three or four hours in the twenty-four. Consequently whatever can be done to make them comfortable. Narrow stalls, insufficient bedding, stiffened joints on arising all discourage the horse from lying down as much as it should, and some from lying down at all. These conditions should be remedied. Stalls should be wide and well bedded.

A high-headed tree is easier cultivated, but the low-headed tree makes fruit picking easier. The ground dries out more quickly under a high-headed tree and more fruit is blown off by the wind. Whenever you find cross branches rubbing each other cut one of them out.

A chicken should never be eaten the day it is killed. The tenderest fresh-killed chicken will be tough immediately after the animal heat has left the body. In about twelve hours, however, the muscles will relax and it then becomes fit for food.

Never make an open dish if it is possible to drain the land with tile. A tile drain costs but little more than a properly constructed open ditch having proper sloping banks, and unlike the open ditch it leaves the land perfectly smooth, without any waste of cultivation.

Here is something about hay worth remembering: When it is 2 or 3 years old it is worth more for feeding than it is when a year old. It goes much farther, probably due to the fact that it contains less moisture, and that a given bulk of it will contain more feeding matters. Moisture is filling but not nourishing.

A good horseman never trots a draft horse, even when he has no load. That is not what they are for. Some degree of speed is necessary, however eyes in a drafter, and the fast walk is not only the proper thing, but the ohly speed to which a draft horse be permitted to go.

Most horse owners feed too much hay and more than he will eat up clean. Many experienced horsemen give no hay at all at the noon meal.

They fill the mangers in the evening and give the horse all that he will clean up in the morning but no more.

The farmer makes the most money who devotes his fields to the growing of crops to feed stock, making use of all the raw products at home, thereby not only saving much of the cost of transportation, but also maintaining the fertility of the soil. Taking everything into consideration, corn will probably produce more food per acre for animals than any other thing that can be grown, and there are but few feeds which can be fed in a great variety of ways.

The future of a steer is made during the first year of its life. Once growthy and thrifty, it takes lost of food to maintain that condition. The well finished steer at two years of age will bring more than the same animal would at four years of age in the same condition. It is a great mistake to send unripe beef cattle to market. They will not ripen on the road. One of the chief advantages of feeding a small number of animals is that of getting a better class of feeders. The farmer who makes beef from his own corn, which he grows on his own land and under ordinary favorable conditions, can fatten beef cattle cheaper than any professional feeder in the business.

Finally, my boy, get this straight in your head and never forget it: Pedigree of the right sort is a fine thing, but it's not always understood. It is only a genealogical record, showing the relationship of animals. Some pedigrees are as worthless as the paper on which they are written. A good calf with a good pedigree in good hands, where there is plenty of good feed, is a good combination. The owner of the calf may live on pedigree, but the calf cannot.

The War and Prosperity.

The balance of trade for the first nine months of the fiscal year, July 1, 1914, to April 1, 1915, reaches the enormous total of $719,803,000. That is to say that we have sold to foreign countries in that period nearly three-quarters of a billion more than we have bought from them. That vast sum has been placed to our credit and much of it is now circulating through the commercial veins of the country, putting new life into business, starting the wheels turning, and giving fresh courage to trade in every line.

Although the greater portion of this unprecedented export business, totaling approximately two billions for the nine months, is due to the war, we may console ourselves with the thought that arms and ammunition from comparatively a small part of it. While it is the war that is restoring prosperity to us, it is not the instruments of war that are pushing it this way but mainly the supplies that come from the field and the factory to which no taint of blood can apply. Nearly $500,000,000 of this export business is made up of breadstuffs alone, and to this we have added cotton, counting up into hundreds of millions also; of clothing an inconceivable quantity, and many other commodities which are the bone and sinew of trade in times of peace.

Much as we deplore the horrible, and, as it seems to us, unless war that is devastating Europe, we cannot avoid admission of the fact that it is bringing us an enormous business. We would rather, much rather, get our business in some other way, but the war was not of our making, the trade it has given us is legitimate and we are entitled to such profit as may honorably accrue from it. A moral question may be raised, and is raised, as to a part of it, but that part alone would have had little influence in returning prosperity to this land.
