

Uncle Silas Says.

I like an enterprising trader, if he is honest, but the man who will take advantage of another's necessities to drive a sharp bargain, I have no use for. It is but little short of criminal to do so. When one can exchange something with another person on a fair basis of respective values and make a good profit by the deal, that is all right, but to know that a person has something you want and that he must sell it once, even at a sacrifice, and you take the advantage of that fact to practically rob him, it is simply highway robbery and if you have any conscience, you won't feel like gloating over your success. You'll not forget the fact that you have wronged him, and, although you may not want to acknowledge it even to yourself, the fact will come home to you that he has been made poorer by your scheming. Remember the good old saying: No man can long be self-satisfied when he remembers the poverty of other people, for which he is responsible.

You chappies who have attended agricultural college a term or two, and thus obtained a smattering of theoretical knowledge of how to manage a farm successfully, are constantly trying to influence your fathers and uncles to go into extensive experiments. You have pet theories, either wholly or partially impractical, and when we won't tumble to your racket, you whisper, one to the other, something you think is sarcastic, such as, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks," and the other fellow will answer: "No, but you can buy a young dog that can be taught new tricks." Say, chappie I wouldn't say a word against the agricultural college, for they are doing wonderful work in the education of farmers, and I am keeping tabs on them and learning something from their bulletins constantly; but, when you come home from college with your head up in the air, your noses pointed skyward, and try to impress me with your wonderful knowledge by telling me about things I knew long before you were born, you make me feel tired. Now, you'll get over that and feel better. I am sure, if you'll get this straight in your heads and not for a minute, you're only in the a, b, c's of even theoretical knowledge of farming, while most of your fathers and uncles have graduated in that very best of schools—experience. See?

Nothing of flesh and blood can work to exhaustion constantly and not break down. A day or so off is as necessary for working animals as it is for people. To a hard-worked horse rest is almost as necessary as food. Not only should he have a free run of the pasture for several hours, but his stall should be made comfortable for him by being wide enough for him to lie down and get up easily, but it should be well bedded with clean straw, for, unless he lies down regularly his rest is never complete and his joints and sinews stiffen. While it is true that some horses sleep in a standing position and continue work for many years, it is equally true that they would wear much longer and do their work much better if they rested naturally.

Bare land unstocked and unworked is unproductive and an expense, because taxes have to be paid on it, and that alone in a few years will equal its value. When you go to farming on your own account you will do well to remember that and put every bit of your land to some use, whereby you can get from it at least the cost of its maintenance. Now, don't say I've done so many years and raked off a fair profit every time, and I don't work my men overtime either. I have always toted fair with my men—giving them a day off occasionally when work was not pressing and they have always done better work for the favor. No, it don't pay to have idle land growing weeds to poison your whole farm and make more work in getting rid of them than it would to raise crops on it and get a profit from them.

An acre of ground will produce more of almost any other meat than it will of beef in the ordinary course of farming. But, given free or cheap range, and beef—or a sort—can be produced at low cost, therefore the absolute necessity for plenty of pasture room on the farm. If they are spring calves you can keep them growing and in good condition at least the first half year in pasture with very little feed other than grass and you can carry them through the winter on roughage from the silo, with a little grain, and bring them out in the spring in condition to be carried along through the summer and kept growing fast to be fattened the following winter for the early spring market, when they will bring a good price. Land has come to be worth something these days and it is a considerable factor in the cost of production. That is one of the principal reasons why beef is high and will remain high. Live stock combined with general farming whereby the farm produce is fed to the stock and sold as meat is the surest way of success.

Rats about a farm will soon eat up all the profits. They are feasting on what you raise while you are sleeping while you are raising more for them to feast on. Now, here is a sure way to get rid of them: Dissolve 5 pounds of copperas in ten gallons of water and add to that enough fresh slacked lime to make a moderately thick whitewash. Apply this liberally to all places where the rats go, and they will desert those places at once. Put some of the whitewash into and around their holes and along their runways wherever it is possible to do so. They will change to other places, but you must follow them up with the wash, and eventually they will leave your place altogether and will not return while the wash remains.

Wars of the Future.

The war of the future will be the war of the inventor, even more than it is today. Science, mechanics and lutionized modern warfare to a terrible degree. Talk to men who remember the Crimean war, and they will tell you that the present conflict is not war; it is wholesale murder, fearful, horrible and inhuman. The wars of the future, however, if the scientist is to be believed, will be even more destructive.

At present he is experimenting with heat rays. If he contends, light rays can be thrown upon a hostile position with the searchlights, why cannot heat rays be similarly reflected; and if heat rays can be sent to a distance why not the hottest rays possible—namely, those of the oxy-acetylene torch? Before such a fiery glare fortresses of steel and stone would melt. The biggest guns would crumble down into pools of steel, and whole regiments of men might, with one blast be shriveled into ashes.

Neither do scientists consider it outside the bounds of possibility in the future to devise means of detonating explosives at a distance by wireless waves. The latter at present scatter in every direction, but the day may come when it will be practicable to restrict them to only one direction, so that they may be aimed; and it is not too far fetched to predict that some future general, touching a button, will send speeding to their target, which will be, perhaps, an entire army division, wireless impulses so powerful that they will electrocute every man within their range.

In regard to big guns, experts say that the limit is by no means reached with the manufacture of 17-inch firminsters. The prophesy 60-inch and even 80-inch guns, which will be able to shoot sixty or eighty miles, the range being given by aviators signaling by wireless.

Again plans are already under way for the construction of monster submarines, with a cruising radius from London to New York. They will be able to carry batteries of torpedoes and ample fuel and provisions for the long cruise. They will thus gain some of the independence of land possessed by dreadnoughts, for even they must visit coaling stations or be attended by colliers. The next half century indeed, may see battleships swept from the seas, and some nation holding the mastery of the ocean by virtue of a fleet of submarines.

Notice to Farmers.

The Tillamook Lime Products Co., is ready to furnish ground lime stone to the farmers. The lime stone is ground so as to pass a 1-6 inch wire screen.

The lime stone will cost $5.00 per ton in sacks at the plant. A charge of 3 cents per sack or 60c. per ton extra will be made for the sacks unless sacks are furnished by the customer. Only grain or meal sacks with a close weave should be brought as the fine dust or powder will all be lost if the sacks have a coarse weave leaving only the coarse grains of limestone in the sacks.

A set of new grinding rollers are being installed to increase the capacity and produce a finer product.

Prof. Roland G. Usher, after having been quoted as confirming a statement made in New York that he knew of a secret understanding between the United States and the allies, made in 1897, has discovered that such an admission is water on the Austro-German wheel. He now disclaims having authorized and other statement that such a secret understanding was entered into in 1897 with Great Britain, and probably with France, but that he is without definite knowledge of its continuance after the Spanish war. He rests his case upon what he wrote in "Pan-Germanism" in which it was stated that such a compact had been made before the war with Spain.

Ford The Ford is lighter than any other car of its size and power. Light weight means economy. Economy in gasoline consumption. Economy in tire expense. Economy in repair bills—less than two cents a mile for operation and upkeep. Yet with all its light weight the Ford is the strongest, sturdiest car that is built. It is the longest lasting car. Vanadium steel is responsible for that. "Anti-fatigue" steel, scientists call it—the strongest, toughest steel put into automobile construction. Experience proves that umbrellas are most often borrowed when the owner isn't in sight. There are signs that many will not, even this year, undertake to see America first. If they can't go to Europe, they will stick around little old New York. Is America so big it frightens them? Upton Sinclair has written verses about the submarine; but Upton, you can never do it justice without prose like some of that in your jungle talk. It is the corn clubs and the pig clubs in the South that are opening the eyes of boys to the tyranny of King Cotton. Those boys will be the farmers of the future.
