

Uncle Silas Says.

The imagination works in two distinct and opposite ways, according to the temperament and environment of the individual. We are all more or less superstitious and, although education has done much for us since the days of Salem witchcraft, vestiges of it still cling to the children's children as it is written, "unto the third and fourth generation."

Warm weather care of horses is of great importance, I assure you. The horse is the farmer's best asset among his animals, and he should have the kindest treatment and best care at all times. When on the road, when a horse has to climb a hill, a good driver will let him walk several rods on the top of the hill before urging him up into a trot.

We have all been discussing for years the ways and means of making country life more attractive, but quietly and effectively one factor, wholly unthought of before its advent, is doing a great deal to solve the problem. The automobile has not only provided a means of quick transportation in comfort, but it is having a great influence on the betterment of the roads of the country.

Plant food in the soil must rot before it becomes of value to the plant. This rotting is similar to burning. Cultivation allows more air to enter the soil and is like opening the drafts of a furnace. For this reason all crude fertilizers will give up their food to the plant more quickly and more thoroughly with good culture than with poor. There are three good reasons for keeping the cultivator going whenever possible.

The farmer who spends nothing to beautify his home and its surroundings is always regarded as a non-progressive, "a tite-wad," who cares only for making and saving money, and has no care or thought for his home, but as a shelter from the weather, a place to eat and sleep. The farmer, who expends money only for actual necessities will never have a home that others will admire, and will miss thereby nearly all the pleasures of life.

withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty," was spoken by a wise man many years ago, and the passing of the years has not affected the truth of the proverb.

Many of the joys of country life are of a poetic, imaginative nature. Inherent between those honest persons who think farm life is a drudgery and those who think it is all glorious I well remember how good everything tasted that mother cooked, especially the new peas and potatoes. She never failed to be dinner on the Fourth of July. It is odd how much of the enjoyment of such things comes from purely past associations--from the memories of youth, how much of it, in short, is pure imagination--simple poetry.

Dick, our hired man, was late in coming to see me work this morning. Amos, and though I didn't bawl him out very much, he seemed to feel that a good excuse for his tardiness was absolutely necessary when I said to him: "You're two hours late, this sort of thing must stop. Otherwise you will have to hunt another job."

Just listen to this Amos. A smart chap in the Journal here sits back and picks his teeth with a gold pick while he tells common dirt farmers, like ourselves, how much he knows that we don't know about farming and the problems of efficient farm labor. He says: "It is a favorite fiction for many reformers that the unemployed of the cities should be sent out to work on the farms. The farmer can't use such men unless they have been trained on the farm before they went to the city."

If one's eyes can be opened to the beauties of nature all around us, there is abundant interest in the wood and fields, and yet, if you should ask the modern business man to find relief from the cares of his office by getting into the woods and learning the names and characteristics of the trees the plants and the insects he would laugh at you. Yet every species of bird has its own fascinations and grace and it is a pleasure to number them all in your circle of friends.

My father during the gold rush to California in '49, made a trip across the plains, and I used to sit with mouth and eyes wide open listening to his stories of wild adventure in the wilderness of the Far West. I was much interested in his hunting of wild animals--buffalo, deer, elk, bear, wolves and even wild horses, which were quite numerous along the foothills and in the valleys of the mountains. It is supposed the original stock of these wild horses escaped from the Spaniard invaders of the country in the long ago, but it has not yet been proven that they were not as much native of the country as were the otthave or wild animals.

Yes, Gertrude, we'll have to buy the auto and learn to run it before your schoolmates come to visit you during their summer vacation. But during their summer vacation, if you'll not go joy riding in it, at least you'll not go joy riding in it, at least if I know it, and, if I should happen to be away from home and find the auto gone when I return, there'll be a riot in the garage when you bring the machine back with a split tire and the motor out of fix.

These are the dog days once more; and without breeze the nights become as dogged as the days. It must be the hardest for the Russians to see what they are fighting for; and perhaps they don't. Torpedoing seems to be such sport that those that do it don't care much what is the nationality of those torpedoed.

riot in the garage when you bring the machine back with a split tire and the motor out of fix. A good automobile is just as necessary as a wagon on the farm, and if it is rightly used it will last a long time and pay for itself many times. It is not so many years since the croakers said that when the buggies came into general use that the country would go bankrupt, because the young men would not attend to business, but would go gadding away from home wasting their time in hiking around with the girls. But their prophecy didn't materialize and the world moved on just as it did before. Now the auto has come in place of the buggy, bringing with it good roads, and quick travel, but greater than all, the opportunity for entire families to get acquainted with every body a long distance from their homes. In connection with the telephone, which only a few years ago was looked upon as an extravagance, the automobile has made it possible for modern community development. Whirling along in his auto a farmer will go to town, do his trading and get home and forget that he has been away before his neighbor who has been plodding along behind old Dobbin has gone more than half the distance and finally comes creeping home long after dark. Yes, dear, we'll buy an auto next week so we may know how to run it before the girls come to visit you. Don't look at me that way Amos; I know what you're thinking about, but your scheme won't work. I shall learn to run the machine first, so don't indulge in joyful anticipation.

Mother, here's something good in the Bungtown Herald--listen: "I remember--I remember the house where I was born, the little window where the sun came peeping in at morn now brightens up a bath room that cost dad a car of corn. Our milkmaid is pneumatic and she's sanitary too, but dad gets 15 cents a quart for milk that once brought two. Our cattle came from Jersey and our hogs are all Duroc, the sheep are South-down beauties and the chickens Plymouth Rock. To have the best of everything, that is our aim and plan for dad not only farms it, but he's a business man." Now there's no flies on that chap, is there mother?

Tribute to The Cow.

E. G. Bennett, state dairy commissioner, in the 1915 Missouri Farmers' Year Book, says:

"Little do we realize that the debt we owe the cow. During the dark ages of savagery and barbarism we find her early ancestors natives of the wild forests of the Old World. As the bright rays of civilization penetrated the darkness of that early period and man called upon the cow, she came forth from her seclusion to share in the efforts that gave us a greater nation and more enlightened people."

"In 1493, when Columbus made his second voyage to America, the cow came with him--and from that time to the present day she has been a more potent factor in making this, our own country, the greatest nation, with the lighter type of womanhood and manhood history has ever known."

"Her sons helped till the soil of our ancestors and slowly moved the products of the farm to market. They went with man into the dense forests of the new world, helped clear them for homes, and made cultivation possible for the coming generation--and when the tide of emigration turned westward, they hauled the belongings of the pioneers across the sun-scorching plains and over the great mountain ranges to new homes beyond."

"Truly, the cow is man's greatest benefactor. Hail, wind, droughts and floods may come, destroy our crops and banish our hopes, but from what is left the cow manufactures into the most nourishing and life-sustaining foods--and is she not life itself to the thousands of little ones stranded upon the hollow hearts and barren bosoms of modern motherhood? We love her for her docility, her beauty and her usefulness. Her loyalty has never weakened--and should misfortune overtake us, and we become bowed down with the weight of years, we know that in the cow we have a friend that was never known to falter. She pays the debt. She saves the home. God bless the cow--little do we realize the debt we owe her!"

Mexico's silyer lining is that none of the revolutionaries are piling up a national debt that anyone will be bound to pay. Kaiser says the war will end in October; but German military authorities are ordering sheepskin coats and motor sledges. Georgia's Legislature is indulgent of Atlanta. It permits her to have her 212 saloons and 16 locker clubs. Local option crushed to earth will rise again.
