

Uncle Silas Says.

Gertrude, yesterday I heard you talking with mother about changing your name when you get married and it seems to worry you. Since then I have been wondering if you are expecting something really serious to occur from the message to an unknown young man, which you wrote on an egg when you were packing eggs for me to send to market the other day.

"Waste brings want" is an old and true saying, and saving is a good disposition for anyone to possess, but where a constant methodical conservation of one's financial resources is practiced, it soon degenerates into a mania—a condition but little short of insanity.

"Companion"—You did right not to go with the young man when your parents forbid. It is nice of him to say that he will wait for you, but the chances are that he will not do so, so you would simply have a good time, without benefit, for the next two years, and, if the young man has proved that he can take care of you, and come back asking for your love, and you still love him, why, I should marry him.

Amos a miserly person is always at outs with the world in general and himself in particular. When I was a boy and lived at home on a farm in Illinois the wealthiest farmer and the most unhappy man in all that region was Bill Stevens, who was noted for his miserliness, and the boys of the neighborhood were continually playing practical jokes on him which kept him in a frenzy of rage about all the time.

"Brown Eyes"—From your address I think you are a little country girl and hope you will be content to wait until the young man seeks your acquaintance. When you meet and speak why not smile pleasantly and remark about the weather? He will know then, that you are an agreeable sort of person, and, if he chooses, can follow up your hint, but I should let him do the rest.

"Lawrence" has not a very good opinion of girls. He says that a number of them come to his house continually, in order that he may go home with them or to enjoy his society. "It makes a fellow tired," he writes "the way these girls lay for me."

Yes mother I paid 25 cents a pound for that piece of beef at the market in the city this morning. It is called

"sirloin top butt," and there is no bone in it. It is a fine roasting piece, and I presume, at the present price of five cents it could not be sold for much less at retail. Fifteen years ago that same cut of beef was retailed for from 8 to 10 cents a pound and the best cuts of steak at 12 and 15 cents a pound, while mutton was considered high at 8 cents. One could get as good a chicken as ever graced a table for a quarter, while fruit and vegetables were correspondingly cheap, and the farmer was quite as prosperous as he is today because what he had to buy cost much less than it does now.

If a young man is invited to his sweetheart's home, Mr. Young Man, with his parents, he would be expected to go, but if the invitation for dinner is only for the old folks, he could not very well go with them.

A young girl of Harvel, Ill., has had trouble with her sweetheart because he asked her to kiss him, and she even "slapped" him when he insisted on kissing her. Now, that was not very lady like, and if you are really sweethearts, and engaged to be married, he had a right to kiss you. If he is only making a record, kissing all the pretty girls of his acquaintance, I should not go out with him.

Just a girl! says she is fighting the demon of selfishness, and I still think that she should think about others more than herself. There is no harm, however, in having a sort of inner life in which she can indulge in dreams. Do you remember the lines of one of the Cary girls: "Sometimes I think the things we see are shadows of the things that be, and what we plan we build, and every hope that hath been crossed, and every dream we thought was lost, in heaven shall be fulfilled."

Mary M. Fairfield Ill.—You can ask your girl friend to tell the young man that his company is agreeable to you, but, if I were in your place, I should wait for him to make the first move. He is quite old enough to know his own mind if he is 21, and I do not think you can gain anything in his opinion by running after him.

Yes mother I paid 25 cents a pound for that piece of beef at the market in the city this morning. It is called jealous of one another. Is there any possibility of your really caring for one of them? I should not deprive myself of the pleasures of having a sweetheart just because I thought every girl who speaks to me wants to marry me. If any of the girls read this I hope they will let Lawrence know that he is sometimes mistaken.

Director of Farm Markets.

The day of the real estate faker, or "land shark," has passed in Idaho, if we are to judge law put on the statute books of that state by the last session of the legislature. The law in question creates the office of "director of farm markets," and in defining the powers of this new state official it includes the following duties:

"To co-operate with producer and consumers in devising and maintaining economical and efficient systems of distribution, and to aid in whatever way may be consistent or necessary in accomplishing the reduction of waste and expense incidental to marketing.

"To receive applications for farm help, and applications from laborers desiring positions on farms, endeavoring thereby to bring the job and the man together, without expense to the employer or the employer.

As Idaho's first director of farm markets, Gov. Alexander has selected W. G. Scholtz, the man who prepared the measure creating the department, and through whose efforts the appointment, announcement was made at the governor's office that Mr. Scholtz was selected because of the strong endorsements he had received from the farmers in all sections of the state; the co-operative marketing associations and other organizations of farmers having strongly urged the governor to get Mr. Scholtz to organize the department and conduct the office during the first two years.

As the editor of the leading farm paper in the state he has led the fight against dishonest and misleading promotion literature, being a firm believer in the theory that it pays as a matter of business for a state to insist that promoters be honest towards prospective immigrants.

Mr. Scholtz knows from personal experience the problems of the new settler, having come from the East a few years ago and worked out his salvation in the sagebrush on an irrigated farm in the Snake River Valley of Southern Idaho.—The Farming business.

Lands.

James Withycombe, Governor.

Information to the Public.

For information of the public I would say that the "Light House trail" over the mountains is open for foot and horse passengers, but some of the bridges are old and not safe.

Idaho, the same as all other states in the "irrigated West," has in a number of instances been a victim of the unscrupulous promoters and land speculators, who, through beguiling literature, inveigled honest homeseekers into investing their all and settling either on unworthy projects or uncompleted irrigation systems, or who, by misrepresentation and false promises of immediate profits, brought onto the land settlers who were financially unprepared to withstand the trials of the pioneer.

Respectfully, John Leland Henderson.

Holdup Charged to Girl.

With his clothing stained with blood and torn, Joseph Davis, a house stealer of Tillamook County, appeared at the police station at 2:30 Saturday morning and reported that two men and a girl had beaten and robbed him of $5 at Albina and Cook streets, Portland about 7 o'clock.

Davis said he met the men at 2nd and Morrison Streets and walked to the east side with them. They found two girls but one left them. At Albina and Cook, Davis asserted the two men and girl suddenly turned on him and took all his money. He recovered in time to chase one of them but could not catch him. He then tried to find a policeman, and, failing, made his way to headquarters.

No Excuse for Hoarding.

Since July 1 any one has been able to open a postal savings account by mail from points having no local savings bank depository. Certificates made out in the name of the depositor are issued as receipts for postal savings deposits, and, if lost, stolen or destroyed, may be duplicated. A depositor may at any time withdraw all or a part of his deposits, with interest due. If remain until the maximum, $200, is reached the credit may be converted into United States postal savings bonds. Post office officials are forbidden to disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of any deposit. From $1 to $100 a month may be deposited by one person. Here is an excellent application of the rule of safety first, with a practical encouragement of thrift. On April 1 last there were 570,000 postal savings deposits in the United States, with $62,750,000 to their credit, a good showing in a system as yet in its infancy. Wherever a person may be in touch with the mails, deposits of this kind may be made and they begin to draw interest at once.

It would be interesting to know how much money is habitually hoarded in this country. Undoubtedly the total amounts into hundreds of millions. That hoarding is an insecure way to deal with money is a fact well known, and frequently illustrated in everyday life. The hiding places are familiar to thieves, and the risk of accidental loss is large. Then the money secreted, or supposed to be secreted, is kept out of circulation, instead of performing the functions of currency in tending to promote business and add to opportunities for employment. Much money is withheld from the general current of affairs by carelessness in limiting the amount carried about on the person. If the average of money in the pockets of Americans is $10 each, the aggregate is a billion dollars. Formerly, the mistaken plea was made that banks were unsafe. Now deposits can be conveniently made anywhere in the country, and protected by the solvency and good faith of the national government. Hoarding has always been foolish. Now it is an absurd waste, a senseless hazard for the individual, an injury to the community, and one of the ways to impede prosperity.

There are all ways of making money, one of which is to be the agent for the disbursement of a "lost estate in Europe, valued at $700,000,000."

Abolition of the death penalty makes but a wheezy appeal every time the reader cons an account of a man who murdered a young woman because she "rejected his attentions."

When one woman says she doesn't want suffrage, there is some difficulty in perceiving how that should have any influence on the woman who does. Millions of men never vote.
