

State Press Flashlight.

The Oregon legislature received another jolt today in the decision of the federal court over the anti-trading stamp law, which was declared to be unconstitutional, as it has already been in many other states.—Umpqua Valley News.

Back in Illinois it has been discovered that some of the bootleggers in dry territory have been getting their drinks by using the fermented liquor that has accumulated at the bottom of the silos. Fermented corn juice has many of the elements found in manufactured whisky. The real drinking man has a strong resemblance to the heathen Shinee in "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain."—Telephone Register.

According to a recent count there are more than 2,000,000 autos in use in the United States, and the number continues to multiply. The sale during the past year has been particularly large, approximately 700,000—entailing an outlay of something like $500,000,000. While the automobile may not be classed in the list of necessities when used for pleasure alone, it has come to fill a want and to serve a valuable purpose outside the field of commercial and industrial use. The heavy sale, too, reveals the widespread prosperity, for it is only the exceptional and incompetent man who buys an automobile which he can not afford. This class, it might be added, would burden itself with some other form of luxury if it were not for the automobile.—Oregonian.

There is some talk of a test being made in the courts of the validity of that provision of the prohibition act forbidding the manufacture of beer by the Oregon breweries. Under the federal constitution which prohibits discrimination in inter-state commerce, and also prohibits the destruction by confiscation of a lawful business, the Oregon brewers may claim that the Oregon prohibition law discriminates against them in permitting residents of Oregon to buy beer in limited quantities from breweries located outside the state while forbidding them to make purchases of breweries within the state. To the open minded observer, it does seem unfair that the citizens of Oregon are permitted by law to patronize California breweries and St. Louis breweries while the same law destroys Oregon breweries. It would seem as though the Oregon brewers ought at least have the same inter-state commerce privileges as are accorded breweries in other states.—Oregon Voter.

The British prize court which has confiscated $10,000,000 worth of American property acted upon the assumption that cargoes, though consigned to neutral countries, were destined for the German army. It had no evidence upon which to support the decision. It reversed the procedure of a century of international law and put the burden of proof upon the shippers. Working itself up into a fine burst of indignation, it charged the Americans with practicing fraud. And proceeded to order the stolen goods turned over to the British military authorities. The German warfare on American women and children has obscured the fact that the British have engaged in a form of lawlessness against neutrals less shameful and easier to be born only because it was against American property instead of against American lives. But now that our controversy with Germany is nearing an end, the United States government will have its hands free to deal with Great Britain. We will no more tolerate British thievery than we will stand for German submarine murder. England will be made to see that she has no license to prey on American shipping.—News Times.

The people whose eyes are red, itching and filled with tears, and their nose ditto, and those who can't stop sneezing—in fact all who are suffering from "pollinosis" or hay fever, may yet obtain relief and final cure from the uncomfortable ailment. The up-to-date plan of escaping hay fever is through vaccination. It has been found out that the hay fever patient is a victim of the pollen of a particular flower. It may be the rag weed, the wild carrot, the daisy, the golden-rod, etc. To solve the fever problem, after the physician has discovered the particular pollen which is the cause of the patient's attack, a very slight scratch is made on the patient's arm and a little pollen rubbed in. If that produces no result another tiny scratch is made and another sort of pollen rubbed in, and this is continued until a pollen is obtained which gives rise to a wheal around the scratch. The pollen that does that is the pollen causing the fever and then the physician in charge sets about making the patient immune in the usual way with injections of pollen solution, or serum taken from an immunized body. Thus far, the physicians of New York City, who have been making researches to combat the hay fever, do not feel safe to guarantee a cure, yet this spring, this body of physicians out of 32 cases treated only two did not respond. This autumn 100 cases are undergoing treatment.—News Reporter.

High Toned Peddlers.

This is the time of the year when Portland and other Northwest cities are invaded by sundry unctuous gentlemen and ingratiating ladies who represent certain New York, or Chicago, or San Francisco, or Paris emporiums of fashion, and who are here for the purpose of selling their wares to impressionable citizens of both sexes. These visitors are mere peddlers who have nothing to sell which might not better be bought at home and who are entitled to consideration from city or state, or its people. They pay no taxes, they pay no rents, they do not invest a dollar here beyond their living expenses, and they avoid, when they can, paying even a peddler's license.

The representations made by these well-dressed peddlers are mainly that the local buyer will get something better or different. It may often be different but not better and it is generally dearer. The Portland stores contain everything the most exacting or critical taste can require, for they are not behind the great cities in quality or style, or even in quantity. The Oregonian has heard of more than one case where the wife or family of some well-to-do citizen, who is an owner of property in the business district, and who rents to retail merchants, make a practice of buying their suits, or hats, or shoes, or linen, or all together, from these high-toned itinerants. They seem to feel very little obligation to patronize the very store-keeper who makes it possible for them to live in luxury. There are others who can find no local tailor good enough for them, and who for good reasons go to San Francisco or Chicago for their clothes. Who ever noticed that such models of perfect form and taste were better dressed than their neighbors? They are not, of course. There is a certain duty the people of Portland and other Northwest cities have to patronize their local merchants. It ought to be discharged willingly, completely and regularly.—Oregonian.

Used For the Slush Fun!

Considering the many calls made on it, the $2,000,000 a week which we are informed the Germans are using as a slush fund in this country is not any too much. The services which the slush fund buys come high. They are not only generally hazardous, but usually dishonorable. They include practically everything from arson to revolution. Between these widely separated slush fund-purchased activities we find the corruption of public opinion by means of the subsidized press, the blowing up of American foundaries, the subornation of labor leaders, and the promotion of strikes. All these things cost money. It does not matter how necessitous is the wretch whose maleficent services are to be employed, the moment he knows that the no less great wretches who would employ him are the disburers of a huge slush fund, his demands for recompense become apparently high. And the work he is to perform is not the sort that an employer can afford to haggle over. So we may be sure the German slush fund, while very large, is none to big to meet all the uses to which it is put.

In connection with this slush fund, the following dispatch, which appeared in a recent issue of the Oregon Journal of this city is of some interest; it is from Washington:

"The department of justice today was in possession of evidence showing, it was alleged, that the German government was directly connected with the attempt of Victoriano Huerta to foment a new Mexico revolution. A. P. Malloy, arrested in New York on a passport fraud charge, asserts that Franz Rintellen, German army officer and banker, supplied the funds for the movement, Rintellen is now confined in a British detention camp, having been caught while en route to Germany. Malloy's evidence probably will be turned over to the State Department."

That is highly interesting, and may account for the visit which Captain Fritz Von Papen, military attache to the German embassy at Washington, recently made to Mexico. Captain Von Papen, it may be recalled, was the writer of a letter, sent to his government, by J. F. J. Archibald, in which he affectionately referred to the people of this country as "idiotic Yankees."—The Spectator.

Hymns as War Songs.

It has always been easy to doubt that "Tipperary" has become a British war song in Flanders. That piece was never written to inspire an army. It was a little love ditty which had come to be very popular in London, and accordingly in all England, at about the calling out of the first line. What more natural than that the men, marching away, should sing it, in want of anything more inspiring? But "Tipperary's" inspiration, such as it is, is that of a young man moving away from the fields of glory and not toward them; west and not east; not onward to war, but away from it. It is easier to believe that S. Baring Gould's "Onward Christian Soldier" has become a war hymn in the British camps. Although that fine hymn is purely figurative in making the Christian appear in the light of a warrior against the forces of evil in the world, although there is in it none of the purely martial spirit, the clash and roar which breathe in every line of the German "Die Watch am Rhein" and the French "Marseillaise," it is nevertheless truly inspiring in the appeal it makes to men to go forward, without fear, in meeting any danger interposed between them and what they feel to be the ends of righteousness.

We have heard it in church services sung in listless droning ways showing all too plainly that its appeals were little felt there. Yet its words glow in a fine fire of zeal and fervor to make it acceptable to men casting their lives upon a stake and ready to stand the hazard of the die. It is full of high and holy thoughts and it quickly commends it to the men in the shadow of death, and who have waited in vain for some minstrel of their ward to strike his harp with a warrior's hand and make it sing to them of the righteousness of their cause, the call to sacrifice, and the salvation of soldiers who die in the Lord. So men have always been in war. An atheist army has never been seen under the sun, and never can be. Any church hymn is better for war music than any music hall ditty.

Mr. Clark's Cradle Roll.

Champ Clark essayed the roll of prophet in his speech on Clark Day at St. Joseph. No one questions his belief in the Democratic party. He has given it loyal allegiance all his life. He even defended all the vagaries of it, when they can, paying even a peddler's license. He has believed in free trade. When even the approximations to it failed to work he has lumbered about for excuses. It was incumbent upon him as the guest of honor at St. Joseph, to find some cheer for the cohorts. Being honest, he could not overlook the fact that the Democratic victory in 1912 was a fluke. He knew that Mr. Wilson got 1,300,000 fewer votes than Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt and that he fell short of Mr. Bryan's 1908 vote 110,000, notwithstanding the growth in population, the enfranchisement of California and the admission of Arizona and New Mexico. The combined vote of the Republicans and Progressives was also short, 74,000 less than Mr. Taft got in 1908, due to so many disgusted Republicans having pronounced a plague on both the factions.

Scraps.

John D. might lend the allies that billion himself; but he's no Wall street lamb. John Bull never loses his poise even when bombs drop on London. Poise rules the world. Billy Sunday's work in Omaha is said to be a financial failure; and what a fall was there my countrymen. The British may release that Standard Oil ship when they hear of John D. Rockefeller's subscription to the loan. A glimpse at a photograph of Mrs. Dumba proves that the doctor possessed diplomatic accomplishments in his courtship days. Remark by the wife of a Kansas editor that there's no such thing as a secret in a small town, may account for small towns remaining so. What shall we do with our ex-presidents? Mostly listen to what they have to say, it seems. They both command a first-rate audience. Our American revolution cost but $140,000,000; but as there was only 300,000 people to pay it, the burden of war was about what it always is. Once in a while the films in a movie show blow up; but even that isn't always as terrifying as being blown up by the stage manager in a real drama. If perfect fairness and impartiality is the idea, conscription is the only right principle in Britain. He that will not willingly defend his country ought to be made to. If Colonel Roosevelt would laugh as often as Judge Taft does it would soften the aspect of the general situation to him a little more. Relax, colonel, relax. Perhaps the war did one thing for us; it punctured that old-fashioned boast that we can "whip any tarnation enemy in all creation." Maybe we can, but brag is silent. That's an underhand way of punning our diplomatic victories by publishing that practically all the submarines have been trapped. Are the British really our friends? Yuan Shih-kai is a great admirer of George Washington. Doesn't Yuan remember that many people wanted to make George Washington king, and that he put away the crown? Billboards are to be thanked for something. A great many young men, by care and training, have come to look like tall, lithe pictures in the clothing ads. This beets eugenics. Union Station, Kansas City, which made such a brave struggle for beautiful surroundings is now being imprisoned in billboards we hear. There's no withstanding their perseverance. Back to the soil! This advertisement appears in the Philadelphia Record: Situation Wanted—Am 40 years old, hale, hearty and anxious to obtain home on good farm, with home environments; have college education, anxious to learn something of farming; make wage secondary—in fact will pay $5.00 per month while learning.
