

Modern West Coast Bungalows being Built in Tillamook.

Pleasing Exterior Appearance.

Very Convenient Arrangements.

These plans and picture represent a very pleasing type of the most modern, conveniently arranged and cheaper homes now being built for small families. The exterior impresses one very favorably at first glance. The interior arrangement, as shown in the plans are very convenient and along the most modern ideas in this class of building. The rooms are five in number, all large and well lighted. The living room and dining room are connected with an open arch; there is an entrance hall with a built-in hinged seat; two bed rooms, with large clothes closets for each; bath room, screen porch. The kitchen has an open pantry corner, which many appreciate more than the usual cabinet kitchen. This is finished in every detail to facilitate and accommodate the work of the kitchen. There is an extra large buffet, which furnishes ample room for fine china, linen, etc. There is a large daylight basement 26x26ft., wood-lift, complete plumbing and lighting. ROLLIE W. WATSON, Tillamook, real estate and insurance man, is now completing a bungalow of this design on a lot in Maple Grove Addition, three blocks west of the City Hall. The plans and specifications are those of the E. W. Stillwell & Co., of 410 Henne Bld., Los Angeles, Cal., designers and architects, of "Representative California Homes," "West Coast Bungalows" and "Little Bungalows." Anyone contemplating building should write them for the above publications, which are worth many times the price of $1.00.

"Fool Hens." "When no place is provided for the hens to roost, and they perch on the harness in the buggy shed or in the stable we have heard the expression: "Those fool hens are always in the way." Again the hens that are left to scratch for themselves, and scratch where scratching is good—in the barnyard, where the pigs and cattle are being fed—are often accused of being "fool hens that eat their heads off." But a literary scribbler, writing of agricultural terms, has a unique definition of the word: "Fool hen—a very tame bird, used for food when necessary."

We asked a reporter for a dairy paper why the reports of the poultry shows were so frivolous and unsatisfactory. "Well," she answered "I was assigned the poultry show, and since I know nothing at all of chickens, I simply had to make it funny or it would not have been placed." We poultry breeders need to impress the writing public with the fact that the poultry business is one of the big industries of the United States—an industry which should be investigated, and treated with the respect that becomes a mortgage-lifting business.

A Binding Scrap of Paper.

In contemplating the remote possibility of a state of war between this country and Germany the most disturbing thought has been that it could not be war at its best or even war at its worst. Necessarily there could be little or no actual warfare either on land or sea. What some have feared is that Americans resident in Germany, or Germans resident in America, might be subject to such indignities and such losses of property as Germans in London had to bear not long after the beginning of the war in Europe. It is interesting to know that this possibility is especially provided for by a treaty concluded by us with Prussia in 1828, and still in force, by which each government in bound to protect the citizens of the other anywhere in its territory in time of war between them. The language of the document is so clear and specific on the point as to make it plain that both countries were anxious to leave no doubt of sincerity. The United States was encouraging German immigration to this country, and the Prussian government was anxious to guarantee the safety of the immigrants and, it is possible, to retain their allegiance to itself. Such motives operated toward the adoption of an extraordinary diplomatic paper in which "It is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other pretense whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending this article but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which it is provided and during which it is to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged article in the law of nature and nations."

Rural Credit Tricksters.

The United States Department of Agriculture has recently received letters from a number of farmers who have subscribed for stock in rural credit companies which appear to have no real cooperative features. In some of these letters the complaint is made that the agents selling the stock make misrepresentations as to when loans may be obtained by subscribers and that the companies later disclaim responsibility for the statements made by the agents. In a number of instances farmers seem to have gained the idea from the agent that they would be able to secure loans within a relatively short time, and express disappointment on realizing that they must wait for an indefinite period for the promised loan and go on making payments just the same on the stock which they have agreed to take.

Where farmers are confronted with a proposition of this character, they should first read the prospectus and the contract very carefully and make sure that they know exactly what these mean, especially the contract. If the contract is so worded that its meaning is not clear after a careful reading this in itself should be reason enough for extra caution. The agent's explanation of the contract is not a part of the contract, nor is his promise that the company will do things not specified in the contract by any means sure to be recognized by the company.

Farmers ought, first, to find out what provision has been made for the protection of the interests of subscribers, either through responsible government supervision over the activities of the company or in any other way, and if they are in doubt they should consult competent advisers with regard to the responsibility of the company before paying over or agreeing to pay over their own good money. Always, in the matter of subscription to stock in any kind of company, they should exercise caution.

Plain Facts About Mexico.

The country is indebted to former Secretary of State Knox for a clear and concise statement of facts and dates relating to the few weeks, in the early part of 1913, when the Madero Government in Mexico was being overthrown and the provisional government of Huerta inaugurated. These statements were made in refutation of the recent assertion that Mr. Wilson, coming into office March 4 in that year, found the Mexican problem left on his hands by his predecessor, Mr. Taft. Mr. Knox, who then was secretary of state in the Taft cabinet, said, speaking at a Grant Day banquet in Pittsburg, that "What Mr. Wilson inherited from Mr. Taft was an outstanding unanswered diplomatic request to the provisional government at Mexico City for definite assurances of the security of American rights and the adjustment of American claims, as a preliminary to consideration of the question of recognition. What Mr. Wilson did was to repudiate the policy of his predecessor in this as in all things, and create a situation making the adjustment of American rights impossible.

Therein is a challenge which will go unanswered. Mr. Knox was speaking from the records of a time all of which he saw and much of which he was. Thus refreshed, the public mind will readily recall that, so far from pressing the claim by the Taft administration as preliminary and essential to recognition, Mr. Wilson announced, very soon after his inauguration, that "under no circumstances will any provision be made for the provisional government in Mexico recognized. The ex-secretary has now shown, by the citation of dates in their chronological order, that the provisional government with which Mr. Taft had been negotiating for specific guarantees was a constitutional government under Mexican law; that Huerta, even if an assassin, was in no sense a usurper; that he succeeded in the office not Madero but Lascruain, followed Madero's resignation February 18, and Huerta's own appointment to succeed Lascruain as minister of foreign affairs, next in the line of presidential succession under Mexican law. On Lascruain's resignation, February 19, Huerta was chosen provisional president by the Mexican Congress, then in session. Withholding recognition under such circumstances was in contravention of all our previous continental policy.

"Little Mother."

One need never despair of humanity for once in every now and then a noble deed worthy a continuing conscience, in the newspaper columns, as much of the sunny side of life, much of earnestness, of selfishness, of brutality and callousness to the suffering or other, it also shows the good Samaritans many roads to travel for the doing of good. And it makes clearer for our seeing how many Good Samaritans there really are in the world when such an appealing case as that of little Goldie Kotonson is brought to public notice in the public prints.

The child an 11-year old girl, was called "little mother" by everybody in Hatti. This endearing name was hers because, after the death of her mother a few months ago, she became a little mother of her younger brother and sister, and housekeeper for her father, a workman in poor circumstances and unable to hire help. A week ago while she was preparing the family supper, the child's clothes caught fire and she was badly burned. She was brought to St. Louis for hospital treatment, but science was of no avail to save so precious a life. The father was unable to buy a grave in a cemetery, or a coffin, much less to take the little dead body back to be buried by her mother's side. "Little mother" was about to be buried in a pauper's grave in Potter's Field, when through newspaper reports, her pitiful case was made known. The response was instant and generous. Undertakers offered service and goods gratis. Checks were sent, and there were cash remittances in unsigned letters. Men refusing to give their names walked into newspaper offices and left generous contributions there. People of means offered homes to the two remaining children. "Little mother" will have decent burial in a grave all her own, and it is now more than likely that it will be beside that of her dead mother, which is where it should be, for we feel sure that there is where that tender little heart would like best to lie.

A sonnet picture this, draped with so many black clouds that it could not be painted in words but for the high breaking through it from the warm, glowing hearts of men and women. That is something worth thinking about. Another thing worth thinking about is how the annihilationist can reconcile his theory in such a case as this. Only a mind almost diseased, it might be said, can it seem possible that a life so consecrated as this foreshortened and shadowed one can end at the end of little more than a decade of sacrifice and suffering. Not Somewhile, somehow, "little mother" will have another chance.

National Rural Credit System.

The passage of a rural credit bill by the Senate, with an overwhelming vote, means that system will be established by this Congress if the leaders are in earnest. The Senate bill could be put through the House under a special rule, at any time. There are so many amendments accepted in committee of the whole as to make it hazardous to comment on the bill until it is read in its revised form, but its smallest provisions insure that the bonds based on long-term farm mortgages will be regarded as gilt-edged securities at home and abroad. The capital surplus and undivided profits of the land banks will be recaptured from all taxation, federal, state and municipal. It is likely that all the capital will be furnished by the treasury. There will be such strict Federal supervision as to title and appraisal of land as to insure confidence and the securities are treated in such a manner as practically to place the credit of the nation behind them. Whatever criticism the bill may provoke will be directed at its paternalistic features. Nobody will question the marketability of these securities.

If the Senate bill has been as carefully drawn as its friends say, there will be no necessity for much expense in selling the bonds. It will not be necessary to send out agents to "boost" securities, any more than it is necessary to employ agents to convince investors how good government bonds are. This means that the rate of interest will be much lower than if the maintenance of sales agents were necessary. No state system can successfully compete with a federal system in this respect.

The article of the treaty so strongly emphasized stipulates that, in the event of war, merchants of either country residing in the other shall have nine months time in which to close up their affairs and depart, and that, as to all others, whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, they shall be allowed to continue their employments and not be molested in goods or person and that, if it be necessary to commandeer their property they shall be reimbursed.

Fairview Giants Win.
