Memorial Services.

Decoration Day was fittingly observed in our city. The business houses were closed from 10 a. m. to 12 o'clock at which time a fine program was rendered at the city hall. The G. A. R., W. R. C., and S. of V. formed in line of march at their hall and headed by the drum corps, under the leadership of J. H. Johnston, paraded through the streets to the hall where the program as previously advertised was rendered.

C. E. Reynolds was marshal of the day.
The address of the day was delivered by Attorney S. S. Jonsson who expressed deep and refined sentiments clothed in the most beautiful language. Following is his address:

Ladies and Gentlemen:
Flowers are symbols of love for the living and for the dead. The lily of the field, arrayed more richly than Solomon in all his glory, is an emblem of human love, sanctified and enthroned by the guardian angels of purity. The roses of the garden are emblems of the heart's affection, untarnished by cupidity or selfishness. The modest flowers of the woodland, kissed by the south breeze, and leaning wistfully towards the sunlight, remind us of the trustful, innocent affection of childhood. In every age and clime, beautiful and fragrant flowers have been associated with the noble affections and the gentle attributes of the human heart. Flowers are also symbols of loyalty, which is but another name for faithful love.

So long as they whom we love are among the living, there are many ways to show our loyalty and affection, by doing things and giving things agreeable to the natural senses; but when the spirit has gone, leaving the hallowed clay insensible to the enjoyment of the material, the wounded and longing heart of the living, throbbing with inexpressible tenderness, overwhelmed by the deluge of desire, seeks some way of symbolizing its love and sorrow; and choosing from all the lovely objects of this world, we pluck its flowers, and offer them, a sacrifice to the memory of the dead.

And thus, we have the sentiment that has given origin to our National Decoration Day.

"The nation shall, under God, have a new birth of Freedom," spoke the immortal Lincoln, from his great heart, in that sublime oration at Gettysburg. The life blood of our chivalrous American soldiery was the price paid for this new birth of our nation. At such a price, the security of our liberties and our institutions was preserved. We cannot value too highly the heritage descending to us through the martyrdom of the bravest men who ever battled for home and country.

History shows that the accomplishment of every great plan involves a correspondingly great sacrifice. And history also shows that no great sacrifice has ever been made in vain; it is a universal law of compensation, that no honest and sincere effort shall be fruitless, that the good attained is always commensurate with the sacrifice to attain it. This is the only consolation we have on an occasion like this; and while we mourn over and reverse the sacred ashes of the dead, we again are reminded that they died not in vain, but "that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

But while we honor the dead let us not forget those among the living, survivors of our terrible civil conflict who have sacrificed all but life to attain the same glorious consummation. The time may not be in the very far future when theirs shall be the graves we cover with flowers. But if we are true patriots, we shall not wait for that time to show them our honor and appreciation, if we neglect them now, we are unfaithful and unworthy, for neglect of the living is indifference to the dead. We cannot repay these heroes the debt we owe them, but the flowers we give them today will be not only symbols but realities. The cheerful word, the smile of approbation, the helping hand will not be offered to insensate clay, but to living men whose heroic mold made the battle of Gettysburg an epical victory, and the surrender at Appomattox a noble example of Christian charity.

Therefore, with flowers and kind deeds, let us honor the living; with flowers and fervent prayers, let us honor the dead.

At the close of the services at the hall, the procession was reformed and went to the water front where the ceremony in honor of the veteran sailors was given, after which all went to the G. A. R. hall and partook of a fine dinner. In the afternoon the usual ceremonies at the cemetery were held.
