

What the Editors Say.

Marion County apparently wishes to obtain all the benefits it can from state institutions, but it is not willing to pay its share. Look at its overwhelming vote against a new penitentiary. It wants more business for Salem, yet it voted against the road bonds. There are those who want to give Salem a lesson and remove one by one of the state institutions to other parts of the state. The commonwealth might as well begin to locate the penitentiary somewhere else.—News Reporter.

Marconi says America can win the war with flyers. Speaking officially he said: "The airplane is an enormous factor in this conflict and will, I believe, grow even more decisive. The United States will be looked to for this contribution in a great measure. It will require a hundred thousand flying machines to subordinate the other methods of war to the air fighting; 10,000 would help mightily but they could not settle the war; 100,000, I think, would. If an overwhelming force of airplanes could be mustered so that the enemy flyers would be driven from the air, they would be helpless in ranging and directing artillery, and would, of course, be at an incalculable disadvantage.—Telephone Register.

The ovation tendered by the people of France to General Pershing and the members of his staff is of course intended as a tribute to the American nation as a whole. The joyous acclaim of welcome accorded Pershing moreover, is a hint of the reception that awaits American troops when they reach France on their way to the front. It is going to be a rare privilege to participate in this experience, a privilege that considerably will compensate for the sterner duties and more arduous work which will follow. But it is good to know that American troops which go to France will still be among real friends, whose admiration, loyalty and desire to be of service, will equal similar tendencies on the part of the friends at home. Military service in France is not going to be entirely confined to a dull and monotonous grind. The American soldiers will be "heroes" in the eyes of the French from the minute they land.—Observer.

Three billion dollars in round figures, or one half more than called for was subscribed to the Liberty Loan. Secretary McAdoo after thanking the banks and citizens generally who acted as committees for the sale of Liberty bonds, said: "Without generous and patriotic support of the press of the nation, the hope of those in charge that it would be a popular loan would not have been realized. The untiring efforts of the newspapers throughout the campaign were a constant inspiration to the various groups of other workers. The foreign language press in 36 languages, gave daily proof of the undoubting loyalty of peoples of foreign birth. Countless other kinds of publicity were contributed generously. All this and more was done to make the loan a success. It was done without thought of return, simply to aid the government. I shall be most grateful to the press if this acknowledgement is given publicity."

Make An End of Anarchy.

When the anti-governmental agitation of Emma Goldman and Alexander Beckman, the anarchists, took the form of obstruction to effect prosecution of war against Germany, the extreme limit of American patience was passed, and the Government properly treated the entire anarchist organization as a treasonable conspiracy.

Arrest of the two leaders was quickly followed by a raid on their headquarters in New York, where a card index to the subscribers of the anarchists' newspaper was seized, and by another raid on the Russian group of Anarchists in that city, where 30 men all of them allies and several of whom could not speak a word of English, were captured. Several of them were in the act of printing a hand bill announcing a meeting to denounce the state military census but actually to protest against the draft. The announcement was couched in the usual inflammatory language, and on the wall was a crude painting of an anarchist throwing a lighted bomb at a building. The close affinity between the anarchists and the I. W. W. was shown by the presence of a red I. W. W. banner.

If there had been any truth in the anarchists' lurid denunciations of the Government, they would not have been permitted to establish an organ, circulated through the mails, which has 10,000 subscribers in the United States and Canada, nor openly to maintain an office in the metropolis, Berkman's snarling boast that he is a "citizen of the world," not of the United States, is eloquent of their determination to accept none of the responsibilities of citizenship but to use American liberty for destruction of American institutions.

In ordinary times it may be well enough not to molest them, but only to watch them and pounce on them whenever they attempt an overt act of destruction. When the country is at war, however, their open destruction of organization of the Nation should be treated as treasonable acts in aid of the enemy, and capture of their membership list should be made the opportunity for gathering the whole organization into a place where they can talk treason only to each other or to stone walls and iron bars. They have abused our hospitality, and by their present conduct have forfeited all claim on our consideration. "Safety First" should be the Government's motto in dealing with them.

There is little to choose between the avowed anarchists and their first cousins, the I. W. W. and the pro-German Socialists, whose sentiments and acts are equally reasonable, though they do not advocate the same extremes of violence. The I. W. W. long ago branded itself as a conspiracy against the law, and the latest phase of its activity marks it as an enemy of the United States in the war with Germany. By continuing their agitation against war and conscription, after war and conscription have become the law of the land, the anti-war Socialists are traitors in doing that which was formerly lawful, however mischievous. Agitation against war no longer has a legal status in the United States.—Oregonian.

Killing Investments for Gain.

For some years past, Oregon has been noted as a state of uncertainties for the investor, due to freak and radical legislation. The reaction came, however, and in recent elections the voters turned down everything of an experimental nature and Oregon has been slowly climbing out of the mire of bad advertising into which it had fallen.

In the mean time, a set of new officials have been put into the public utility commission and some of them are not familiar with the past conditions in the state against which the people turned at the polls.

To popularize themselves and in an effort to secure votes at the next election, they seem to be playing up the time worn arguments of down with the corporations. They have made unnecessary reduction in rates of the largest light and power company in the state which has been struggling to get on its feet after several years, during which time it did not make interest on its indebtedness.

Now they take the case of the railroads asking advances in freight rates and practically decide it in advance and seem to advocate that no increase be allowed regardless of the justice of the matter.

These tactics do not help Oregon and such decisions are doing more to keep the state at the bottom of the list of western states in manufacturing and growth in population than anything else.

To see the lumbermen fight a 15 percent increase in freight rates when they themselves have doubled the price of their own products is laughable. Due to the increase cost of lumber, the United States will pay millions additional for the ships it builds to fight the submarines.

This is simply an illustration, as practically every product in the country has advanced in price from 25 to 400 per cent except railroad and utility rates, and yet the very people who furnish these great industries with supplies at these advanced prices expect them to continue furnishing their services as the same cost.

Politicians who use such policies to gain popular favor are not standing for the American spirit of fair play which we are advocating to the world today, and are injuring instead of helping their own respective communities. Seaside Signal.

Wood Briggs.

There is only one word with which to characterize Wood Briggs, the inimitable Kentuckian, and that is dramatic. He objects to being called a "stagey." He does not permit the term eloquentist, for he does not elocute. Briggs just walks out on the platform and with an announcement that he is only a garden variety of story teller, quickly loses himself in several of the most brilliant character studies the platform has ever witnessed. Taking for his feature character studies, the negro of antebellum days, Briggs brings a sympathetic understanding to his art that makes his negro dialect stories, classics. Briggs knows and loves the type—a few of whom still totter and mumble about their old hunts of slavery days. To hear the immortal classic "Uncle Dan'l," as interpreted by Briggs, is a memorable event. He speaks from his heart when he tells the story of Uncle Dan'l, the old dorky who pleads in court for his wife, who has been arrested for beating up Uncle Dan'l himself. Briggs visualizes this character to astonishing reality—the serio-comic circumstances of the situation, the pathetic tenderness of the old fellow, his loyalty for his contentious spouse—and above all a philosophy from which anyone may draw a lesson in practical Christianity.

Wood Briggs completely satisfies the Chautauqua demand for clean, wholesome entertainment. Then despite Mr. Briggs' contention that he is only a story teller, it is equally true that he is as much a lecturer as an entertainer. His mastery of negro dialect and drollery is unsurpassed and has not been equaled since the days of "glorious" Bob Taylor.

Bowel Complaints in India.

In a lecture at one of the Des Moines, Iowa, churches a missionary from India told of going into the interior of India, where he was taken sick, that he had a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with him and believed that it saved his life. This remedy is used successfully in India both as a preventative and cure for cholera. You may know from this that it can be depended upon for the milder forms of bowel complaint that occur in this country. For sale by Lamar's Drug Store.
