

BOARD'S ONE CONSIDERATION IS GOOD OF NATION

If Man Can Go To War Without Wife Going to Poorhouse, He Had Better Go, Will be View On Claims of Drafted.

The only thing the district exemption boards of Oregon will consider is—What is best for the United States. If a man is drafted, the United States is entitled to his services, and he'll have to go, unless his going would compel the nation to support someone, or unless it would be difficult to replace him in his business, providing that business is something that is useful to a country at war. These are the two main decisions reached at the meeting of the three Oregon district boards with Adjutant General George A. White in Portland last week.

Dan J. Malarkey of the Portland district, was elected chairman of the combined three boards which were permanently organized at the meeting, and Lee M. Travis, of Eugene, was made secretary. Upon going through the instruction books from Washington, the men found that many things were left to the discretion of the boards, and it was upon these matters that they formulated definite policies, so that all Oregon boards, if they cared to do so, might also follow the same decisions and save so many appeals to the district boards.

"There are two main questions that come up," Mr. Travis said. "There are claims of exemption because of a dependent, and claims of exemption because of the business in which a man is engaged." In regard to the first claim, Mr. Travis summed up the boards' decision, when he said: "If a man can go to war without his wife's going to the poorhouse, he'd better go."

In regard to the second matter, most exemptions in this district are being claimed by farmers, Mr. Travis said. In order to be allowed an exemption claim, a man must have been engaged in that business (farming, or any other necessary to a nation at war) for some time. Also, if he can be replaced, he should not be exempt.

In short, the board realized that the nation has entered a gigantic struggle, and the only thought of the members is to do what is best for the nation. They are not considering individuals nor business projects. They believe that a majority of the people do not realize the seriousness of the situation, and that they will not do so until they read of the death of some relative or friend on the firing line. The board believes it best to try to take the viewpoint of efficiency that America's enemies are taking, and to take it on the start.

We have already published part of the list in the order in which the 724 persons who registered will be drawn in the next draft, which will not be for two months or more. These names 1 to 300. We give today the remainder, 301 to 724. Some persons have become confused in the army number and the number in which they will be drawn.
