"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" at the Gem Theatre.

The story of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" as told in the Fox Kiddies Feature Film is briefly as follows:

The scene of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" is laid in Bagdad and at the opening the two principal characters are introduced, one being Aladdin, the son of a traitor, and the other the Princess, who is the daughter of the Sultan. Aladdin is known chiefly because he is "pure of heart." The Princess is receiving attentions from a Magician, which attentions are very distasteful to her and she does not hesitate to show it.

In her rides about Bagdad she has interested the son of the traitor and he is greatly attracted to her. When she is being pressed by the suit of the Magician she decides upon the very womanly method of escaping the betrothal which the undesirable suitor seeks.

The Princess goes out riding one day on a camel and when passing by the shop in which Aladdin is working her slipper falls off and on to the street. The boy picks it up and gives it to her. This is the beginning of the acquaintance.

The Magician, however, sees this act and knowing that the boy is "pure of heart" decides to use him to get hold of the wonderful lamp which he knows is hidden in a great cave that is controlled by a genie. He wins the confidence of the boy and finally persuades him to go to the cave and procure the lamp. Aladdin has to enter the cave alone and after picking up the lamp he rubs it and a genie appears to him and tells him of its great value—that whosoever rubs it can receive any wish. The Magician succeeds however, in getting the lamp from Aladdin before Aladdin can make the one wish of his heart—that is the betrothal of the Princess.

Then follows a series of events where the lamp passes from one to the other each taking advantage of it when it is in his possession to further his suit for the hand of the beautiful girl.

Finally, after the Magician sees that he cannot win the girl even with the immense gifts that he is able to present her through the possession of the lamp, he decides to abduct her and take her to his desert home. He does this and when she will not consent to a betrothal he places her in a den of lions and tells her he will lift the door between them and she will be devoured unless she consents.

In the meantime, Aladdin has learned of the Princess being taken away and follows her. He almost perishes in the desert, but finally the horsemen of the Sultan arrive just in time for Aladdin to rescue the Princess and the magician is finally thrown into the lion's den and meets his fate.

The betrothal of Aladdin and the Princess is then announced. See this pleasing picture at the Gem Theatre Tuesday July 2nd.

"American Buds" at the Gem.

"American Buds," a William Fox romantic drama featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, the former upsetting the plans of a German spy, will be the feature of the program afternoon and evening, Thursday, July 4th at the Gem Theatre.

The Lee children, who have been widely advertised as the Fox "Baby Grands" and who have been seen previously as staves in "Two Little Lumps" and "Troublemakers," appear in "American Buds" as orphans, the scenes being laid in an orphanage and subsequently in an army camp. In both places the children devote themselves principally to stirring up trouble. Indeed, the action hinges chiefly on the troublesome question of their parentage.

Aside from the fun features developed by the pranks of Jane and Katherine, there is said to be a strong plot covering the dramatic phases of the production. A colonel's daughter is courted by an army officer and by a former Austrian officer, now doing duty as a spy. The captain who is conducting important experiments for the government, wins the girl, but the engagement is broken when it seems to be established that he is the children's father. Matters are straightened out by the spy's attempt to steal a report of the captain's experimental work. Jane detects him and raises an outcry which results in his being shot and in a death bed confession that he is the father of the children and that their mother is an older daughter of the colonel.
