

What the Editors Say

Order for three billion cigarettes, enough to provide two smokes for every person in the world, have been placed by the war department to supply American soldiers for the rest of the year. When the abuses of war are all wiped out the cigarette will go with the rest of them. Some day we will get back to the old idea of "cotton nails," and the tobacco trust will not have such a high harvest. Some evils are condoned by the exigencies of war.—Telephone Register.

Had C. S. Jackson devoted the same energy to building up a reliable news service for his newspaper that he did to an attempt to put the country newspapers out of business through his initiated bill reducing the rate they may charge for legal publications, while his own rate remains at a fat figure he would have saved the embarrassment of today, when the whole state is holding him responsible for the fake peace news his newspaper was chiefly instrumental in circulating.—Independent.

It is said that no other great nation in the world's history ever had so swift and decisive a fall as Germany. When a nation gets it well fixed in its head that it can conquer the world, and is not confident of its prowess that it didn't hesitate to disregard the rights of other great powers such an end is befitting, and sooner or later it will come. Germany is only reaping the cruel harvest that it recklessly sowed, and is entitled to no sympathy, or so far as its government is concerned, no pity.—Telephone Register.

One kind of competitive "service" which the merchants of the world are going to encounter in the future is illustrated by an incident of the allies' entry into Ghent. Here the victorious troops found the city bedecked with Belgian flags, for which they had been prepared by a similar experience at Ostend, but the profusion of which amazed them. It might be supposed that the German army of occupation would have suppressed most of the Belgian flags, but it was found that when the German retreat became certain German traders had entered the city and sold large quantities of flags to the people, at prices which yielded them a handsome profit. The allies themselves had been too busy even to think of this businesslike procedure, but even in the hour of defeat the German did not lose instinct and thrift. The sale of enemy flags is a bit of enterprise which probably would not occur to anyone in the world except a German.—Oregonian.

The need of co-ordination of missionary effect in foreign lands is strikingly emphasized by William T. Ellis in an article in the Christian Century, in which the writer mentions the fact that there are seventy-eight denominational missionary societies now at work in China, "representing twenty-eight kinds of Christians." He points out the absurdity of perpetuating in China separate organizations such as the Northern and Southern Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches which were the outgrowth of differences entirely local to America, and he suggests that even the wealth of Chinese ideography would prove unequal to translating the ideas contained in some of the names of our eccentric types of denomination. We have an "Old-Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit" Baptist Church in the census returns, and the Holy Rollers are represented with a mission in China. But these, to the Chinese mind, only serve to becloud the fundamental principles of Christianity.—Oregonian.

United Press Service.

C. S. Jackson, publisher of The Journal, has often expressed himself to the effect that he would not take the Associated Press Service, but preferred the United Press, the Hearst International and other sensational rather than reliable service. Now he is losing hundreds of subscribers because of the conspicuous unreliability of the United Press service in bulleting the armistice without verifying the facts. If the Journal had featured the denial it would have been better for it. But it stuck stubbornly to the "fake," so now it is paying the penalty.—Oregon Voter.

Peace Comes.

The war has ended. Columns could be written, but the single sentence tells the tale. The hell of more than four years has ceased. Right has triumphed over wrong, and the victory is complete. The greatest military machine the world has ever known has been smashed and the autocrats who created it and who planned to dominate the earth are seeking safety in flight. But our task is not finished and we must remain steadfast and resolute to the end. The arch-criminals must be punished, for it would be a black blot upon this century were those who brought about the woe and calamity of the past four years to go scott free. Justice must be administered, payment for wanton ruin exacted and the feet of the dupes who are now set free firmly established in the paths of safety and progress before our task is ended. These are the problems we must unitedly face and wisely solve, and it will require the best efforts of us all.—Independent.

Raise Horses of Better Quality.

Large numbers of undesirable mediocre horses are being turned into the market at present in all parts of the country in order to save feed, according to reports of the United States Department of Agriculture. As a consequence the market is glutted with commonplace animals of this description to the extent that the prices paid are unusually low. The department urges farmers to raise horses of better breeding and quality. In view of both the domestic and foreign demand during and after the war for quality horses, farmers should begin now to stock up their barns with horseflesh of the desirable type. Under existing conditions, feeding stuffs for work animals are extremely high in price. One heavy draft horse will perform the work of practically two undersized, inferior plugs, while such an animal can be fed at about the same cost for maintenance as one of the plugs. When the farmer desires to sell a heavy horse of quality and breeding he can always locate a ready market, whereas inferior animals ordinarily can be disposed of only at a sacrifice.—News Reporter.

What To Do With Kaiser.

There is all sorts of conjectures as to what will become of Emperor William and others of the royal families of the central powers. No one knows but it is probable that the assassin will find some of them. At present, William, the crown prince, and the general staff are safely enclosed in an ancient castle in Holland, where they are claiming neutral protection. Emperor William has been indicted for murder on several counts in England, France and Belgium. If he escapes the bullet of his own enraged former subjects, it is possible that he may be called to face trial in the courts for murder. It has been suggested, and it appears that the suggestion is not without real merit, that it is useless to take the life of these parasites, but rather that they should be condemned to life servitude in the salt mines of bleak Siberia, where they all, as a class, should be compelled to work as long as physically able, and until death comes to their relief. To be forced to work at such employment in the garb of a peasant would, it is alleged, be equivalent to hell itself for these de-throned autocrats. In this way they might get a glimpse of the untold woe they brought upon the world.—Umpqua Valley News.

Britian's Day.

The movement for the celebration of December 7 as "Britian's Day," which has been launched in 300 cities of the United States, is a recognition of the share of the glory to which our ally is entitled for its part in winning the world war. It will not detract from the credit due to our other allies, who doubtless will also have their days, to give this occasion a reflection upon how much was accomplished by our British neighbors.

Until the United States entered the war, Great Britain was the mainstay in financing her allies. She supplied France and Italy, and Russia prior to the revolution, with vast quantities of munitions, and since our participation has furnished us with great quantities of artillery. She contributed great stores of coal to Italy and France, and much foodstuffs from overseas. It is no secret that the British navy and merchant marine made it possible for us to transport our Army abroad. About 70 per cent of anti-submarine protection and about 60 percent of transport was furnished by British vessels.

The number of British killed, exclusive of colonies and dominions, has been more than a million. Total casualties last year alone aggregated 880,000. Her donation of men to the allied cause has been upwards of 8,000,000.

Other nations have done nobly, and we pride ourselves upon our own performances in the war. But these circumstances, as we have suggested, do not make the reasons for a national tribute to Great Britain less compelling. It will be well for all to compare performances and sacrifices once in a while.—Oregonian.

On the Wrong Track, As Usual.

That paper, misnamed "Apeal to Reason," at one time very close to anarchistic, somewhat milder now, is still traveling the path it hopes will lead to yellow socialism. A recent issue said: "Why not eighty percent war profits tax? It hasn't done England any harm. Some day we'll take care of that other twenty per cent too." It doesn't mean the "20 percent war profits" which it expects to "take care of some day," but means that some day there'll be no profits allowed anyone and everything will be equally divided among mankind—an absolute impossibility. The world will never be filled with that sort of angels. An example doesn't often happen when a rank socialist, earning his living by day's wages, becomes wealthy, but when he does you never hear of him rushing out and wacking up with his former socialist friends, do you? And they never will. Man just naturally isn't that kind of animal. The way men look at wealth depends upon which man has it.—Itemizer.
