What the Editors Say.

"Life" contained a clever picture the other day. A valiant woman had rushed into the street to protest against a driver's abuse to his horse, declaring the poor animal to be half dead. The driver replied: "He's not as dead as that bird on your bonnet!"—Telephone Register.

Press reports state that a two-headed snake was recently captured in Idaho. It was not many moons ago that many men saw many snakes with many heads in Idaho but it was supposed that they had become extinct since the Idaho brand of prune juice was eliminated.—Sheridan Sun.

It is suggested that Mr. Taft or Mr. Hughes probably will represent this nation at the forthcoming trial of Bill Hohenzollern. And if the former kaiser had anything to say about it, he probably would elect Taft for the reason that the latter looks so good natured.—Observer.

We remember the time when a young man who had saved up a hundred dollars and had a job at eight or ten dollars a week thought he had a perfect right to get married and begin housekeeping and the girl's parents thought she was making a good match to get a youth thrifty enough to have that much money.—Umpqua Valley News.

The shipping board says it will eventually give permission to build ships of an approved type, but with the world short of ships builders who are facing a shut down of plants with consequent disorganization of a painfully built up force believe that even if the ships they would build now are not the perfect type they are better than no ships at all.—Independent.

Why wouldn't it be a good idea to have a few modern decisions from the higher courts? About everything now is based on decisions rendered way back in the dim and misty past. Can't we get away from those dark ages? Was the only good law on earth manufactured back there at the beginning? We have modernized about everything else, why not take a few cracks at the law? We might begin on the decision whether Governor Olcott is governor or secretary of state or both.—Telephone Register.

Isn't Nature wonderful? We would say she is.
When for fifteen years you have been cussing a weed pest that threatened to take the place, and then it suddenly turned round and makes you an average of $150 an acre per year almost anybody would say nature was a clever little joker.
And yet that is exactly what has happened to a lot of farmers in the Pacific northwest.
For years they have been cussing the evergreen blackberry.—Benton County Courier.

In the early months after our entrance into the war an assistant secretary of the president's cabinet in speaking before a great audience in the Spokane armory, declared that to win the war the country ought to "spend money like a drunken sailor." But why should the country go on six months after the armistice, spending money like a drunken sailor? It is high time and past time that some one in authority should enter vigorously on the work of demobilizing a vast number of war time agencies through which these enormous expenditures are pouring.—Spokesman Review.

Thanks to the persistence of the French, the ex-kaiser, military heads and other military persons of Germany thought to be responsible for the war and atrocities of the war are to be tried for their alleged crimes. Despite the feeling against them, they are to be given a fair trial. It is probably that one of the terms of peace will be that military records and other evidence needed in these trials will be turned over to the allies. This is the proper procedure. Someone is responsible for the law. If it can be proved that all the things said about the ex-kaiser and Hindenburg and their ilk is true, they should suffer accordingly. If they can prove that their side of the story is true and that what has been said of them is untrue, that should be known, to the end that justice may prevail and blame placed where it belongs. The kaiser and his associates should welcome a fair trial. To fight such proceedings would be tantamount to saying that they know they are guilty and do not want it proved on them.—he Sentinel.

An exceedingly interesting experiment is now begun in North Dakota. The state is to operate flour mills, mines, warehouses, a rural credit scheme, and other enterprises. As a North Dakota banker, who is probably opposed to the scheme, remarks in the Saturday Evening Post: "There is no reason why it should not succeed if the right men run it." Quite a good sized "if". If North Dakota, or any other state or municipality, will put the most competent business men in charge of such enterprises, they may get efficient and economic service. If these managers, no matter how able, have to depend on political wire pulling to hold their positions, they can't accomplish great results. Their success must depend solely on their efficiency, not on pulls or favoritism of any kind, and they must be given a free hand in management. And at best, there will be strong temptation to feel that the public treasury can be drawn upon to make up deficits or cover the cost of unsuccessful operation. Everybody must put the same energy and initiative into it as if it were a private corporation. If the thing is run by ordinary type politicians, it will never be a success. There are many ways of showing a paper profit. Many enterprises look very good, until you realize that no depreciation charge has been made against the plant, which has been running down every year. So that a theoretical annual profit may be an actual annual loss. The average run of the voters must learn to make a discriminating analysis of results. In the face of all these difficulties the North Dakota people can make a success, real success, of this scheme, they will have many imitators.—Umpqua Valley News.

Carranza Foolish to Scorne Monroe Doctrine.

A statement by the Mexican foreign office, published in Mexican newspapers, declares that the Mexican government "has not recognized, nor will it recognize the Monroe doctrine or any other which may attack the sovereignty and independence of Mexico."

To that our own state department replies with force and truth that Mexico owes its independence to the Monroe doctrine. During our civil war Mexico had lost its sovereignty and independence. A foreign king, Maximilian, sat upon a Mexican throne, maintained there, not by the will of the Mexican people but by the imperialistic support of the emperor of France.

Torn by internal strife the United States could not, for the hour, enforce the doctrine. Eastern and patriotic Americans urged Lincoln to act, but in his great wisdom and patience he said "one war at a time." When the civil war was over the United States reassessed the doctrine, the Mexican people regained their independence; Emperor Maximilian was executed and the republic was restored. The monarchies of Europe, seeing that the United States would uphold Mexican independence, prudently withheld their support from the overthrown monarchical element in Mexico.

Mexica has been the beneficiary of the Monroe doctrine for nearly 100 years. It stood as a bulwark for the young republic against Spain's strong desire to reconquer it when it was weak. In the fulness of time it will need that doctrine again, and if the Mexican people are wise they will rebuke the vain and pompous Carranza for turning against his best friend.—Spokesman Review.

"Public Be Damned."

(From Ed Howe's Monthly.)
A good many years ago one of the Vanderbilts was accused of saying, "The public be damned!" He never said it, but how Vanderbilt was abused because of the rumor that he did say it!

It was charged that he said it in connection with the railroad business. But now that the government has charge of the railroads, how perfectly it carries out a policy of "The public be damned." A gentleman tells me that in New Orleans he wanted to buy a railroad ticket. He took his place in line and waited fifty-five minutes before he could transact his business. And when he finally reached a clerk, he was told he was lucky to be waited on in fifty-five minutes.

This is the railroad "reform" we have accomplished after years of effort. And rates are 35 per cent higher than under private ownership, with a tremendous deficit looming up.

Some of our wisest men say the proposed league of nations is a similar "reform."
That's the trouble with usfool Americans; we scream and agitate for a certain thing, claiming it will solve our problems; and then discover it isn't what we need—that all our work for reform has been wasted.

Those Excitable Huns.

An excitable German professor named Eltzbacher, described as an influential member of the conservative party, proclaims in an article entitled "The Last Means": "In 1812 the Russians set fire to holy Moscow in order to make vain Napoleon's triumphal march. We Germans can now show that we too are able to take great decisions." If he were to attempt at this late date to set fire to Berlin, possibly the government of his own country would deal with him as effectively as Noske did with the Spartacists.—New York World.

The German propaganda stunts that have been filling the newspapers will be followed by a series of calamity articles, for the Huns, when pinned down are the biggest squealers in the whole world. But let them squeal for no one is going to pay any attention to them, no matter how persistently they continue squealing.
