Mr. and Mrs. Joel Warren, of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, left Tillamook Friday for Portland, Salem, and the southern part of Oregon, on their way home. They have been visiting through Oregon for nearly a year, and say it's the first year they have spent without a winter or summer, for the weather here has been mild and equable all the time, they think. They are going to the State Fair at Salem and then to Rogue River Valley.
The Sunday School rally at Beaver on Sunday next promises to be one of the pleasant events of the season for that part of the county. If the weather remains good the grove will be used for both program and picnic dinner. All of the Sunday Schools in the south part of the county, as well as those from Tillamook will be represented; and any one wishing to bring picnic dinner and attend is cordially invited to do so. Prof. O. V. White will speak in the afternoon on "The Mission of the Sunday School," and the "International Sunday School Standard," will be the leading subjects discussed.
The deer season throughout Oregon will open September 1st this year and will continue open until October 31st, according to an announcement made by Carl D. Shoemaker, State Game Warden. The only exception is in Union and Wallawa counties where the season will open on September 10th and close on November 10th. Heretofore, the season has opened on August 15th in district No. 1 which consists of all counties west of the summit of the Cascade Mountains. The season this year is uniform in both districts except in the two counties heretofore mentioned. The bag limit is two deer with horns which is the same as last year.

MILES AND NEWELL BACK IN JAIL, TIRED AND DREARY

Their Escape Will Destroy Right to Plea for Leniency. Penalty 2 To 20 Years.

Down the cold hard concrete steps, back of the sheriff's office in the courthouse, in a dark cool cell, in a black barred steel cage, are Harry Newell, and George Miles, the two forgers who were caught last Thursday morning after escaping from the cell.
Friday when interviewed, Miles looked tired, and his eyes were swollen underneath, and very red, as he wearily said:
"Newspapers, huh? I don't want to say nothing for the papers, such things better be left out. It starts many a kid on the road to the bad, by reading sensational stories."
When asked if it started him, he said, "It helped."
But there is nothing in the story of Miles and Newell that would start a kid to the bad. The story is simply one of unhappy crime. Miles had a ten year sentence for larceny at the state penitentiary, and after serving but two years of it, he was let out on parole, on his honor to behave like a gentleman. Now he has broken his word and must go back and serve out the ten years sentence as well as the new sentence for forgery, the penalty of which is from two to twenty years imprisonment.
The proverb, "thy sins shall seek thee out, and be punished," is all too true for him. And the inevitableness of the fact was realized at the sheriff's office from the first. Bloodhounds were not called because it was realized that in this day and age of telephone, telegraph, railroad and automobile, an escaped criminal has no chance if his escape is discovered in reasonable time. Fate was hanging over the two men from the first. Even they realized it, and told deputy McKinley, that they were hoping to be caught before they had reached Hemlock. There is nothing cheerful or romantic about their story after they escaped.
They got out, and ran through the woods, soon tired, not well-fed, and the breath of freelifeandfresh air so eagerly seized, they saw meant several more years added to their prison sentence. And the jail is a mere sample of the pen. They sit on little chairs on a steel floor, with a large sheet of steel overhead. Steel bars block every vision out.
Miles nervously laughed how they escaped. "Oh, let the people guess how we did it, it'll do 'em good to guess. It won't hurt anybody not to know what they got no business with." He has a slight accent when he talks, and laughs much, though bitterly.
Harry Newell wanted to see the last issue of the paper and see what we said about "Those jailbirds." "Bring me down a paper, Stanley," he asked of deputy sheriff Clarence Stanley who accompanied the reporter down there. "I want to see how many mistakes they made," he laughed from his narrow cot in a tiny cell, dark and gloomy.
But the cell could not be as gloomy as life for Newell now. He is only 19, and yet his life has entered the records of the scourge of people, "Those who don't fit in." There is no place in the world for him, or his friend, so they will be sent to the penitentiary, and live on steel floors and take their pleasures when the pleasures are allotted them, and eat by rote, and sleep by rote, and have a million rules to live by, that other unfortunate are also living by.
They followed the road from Hemlock to the Grand Ronde riding and walking all the way. Both of them were wanting to be caught they say. So Newell got in an automobile that was passing that way and rode through Dolph, standing on the running board of the machine. Miles walked right up the middle of the road, and when the sheriff's party came up to his tracks, they followed all the distance, until they caught him, by watching his shoe prints.
Newell in 4 Jails in 8 Days.
When seen again Wednesday, Miles and Newell talked and laughed freely. Newell says that considering it was his first jail experience he had been going it pretty strong. He had been in four jails in eight days. The Hood River jail was his first resting place after being arrested. Then he was held over night in the Portland castle, and then here, and then taken to the county's stronghouse at McMinnville.
They laughed over the story in the paper, and said that it was pretty nice to only have to break jail to get a column on the front page, and complimented the reporter on what he had written. However it was not Newell's peg leg that was used to open the bars with, but a chair round. The young man values the leg too highly to use it in any such way.
Miles Has a Family.
Miles the older of the two, has a wife and writes letters to her frequently, and she too shares in the sorrow of his renewed confinement.

He wanted to turn back the first day, and return to the cell, but Newell said "Don't be a quitter" so he plodded on down the road, when all the pleasure was gone, and hope too.
The search party came very near them several times, and once one man, some temporarily sworn deputy met them when he was alone on the trail with them, and he very politely got off the trail they say, and disappeared in the woods, leaving them a great deal of room to pass. They had money and so plenty of meals all along the road according to Miles.

AIRPLANE CRASHES TO GROUND WITH PASSENGER YESTERDAY

Caught in Gully and Whirlpools in The Air Caused by Wind Through Trees.

The aeroplane that flew in here Saturday night, after a fine showing for a few months, crashed to the ground on the field next to the fair grounds yesterday afternoon. Fortunately no one was injured. The story got out and was around uptown for a while that the passenger was killed, but Syd Paul, who was the passenger was only bruised slightly under his right eye, and banged his nose, making it bleed.
Lt. Elmer Cook, the aviator was not in the slightest way in fault, or blamable for the wreck. There was a strong wind blowing, as it had been blowing for several days, and he ran along the field, the machine rising nicely until it caught in the gully and whirlpool of wind formed by the trees, and then it dipped first to one side, then to the other, and was so far thrown out of the path Aviator Cook had started, that he either had to hit the trees or shoot to ground, and he chose the ground. The machine was only about 40 feet high, and he came down at such an angle, even with the disadvantage of weird air-currents, that the plane was not totally ruined. The tail of the body doubled up and crumpled down, but the wings and engine are practically unharmed.
About 25 passengers were taken up Sunday, 15 Monday, and 10 or 12 Tuesday before the accident occurred as he was making his first ascent yesterday. As some one remarked irrelevantly, "Yes, the passenger got his money back, and had a ride and accident both." The plane will probably be taken to Salem for repairs. The damage is covered partly by insurance.

SIXTH ANNUAL COUNTY FAIR OPENS TO HUGE CROWDS

Finest Stock Show Yet; Granges Have Fine Exhibits; School Fair Is Attractive.

Tillamook County's Sixth Annual Fair opened Tuesday night with an attendance numbering in thousands. They were entertained with races, the exhibits from the granges, and the finest cattle show ever held in the county. The amusement concessions also provided a great deal of amusement, especially for the proprietors, who took in money hand over fist. "Easy" is no name for the spenders of Tillamook, a stronger word should be used.
The stock barns are a most interesting place especially at feed time, when every old mama and little calf, and fat bull is bellowing in ninety-nine different keys for food, and food right away. Perhaps some of the tones denote "I am worth $1000 then bring along grub."
The rivalry of the different breeding associations, most particularly the Jersey and Holstein, has caused a greater number of entries of cattle than ever before. The Guernsey breeders also have a fine exhibit of stock. Large prizes are offered for the best milking cows tested during the fair.
In the exhibition hall many beautiful floral, handwork, cooking and farm product exhibits are out. One table is piled with enough Tillamook cheese to feed all the county for a day or two. The Fairview, Nestucca Valley, Cloverdale, Pleasant Valley and Beaver Granges have exhibits. They contain many fine pieces of sewing, appetizing looking pieces of cooking, and clean farm products.
Out in the school building there are fine exhibits of paintings, sewing and other school work is shown by the tastefully arranged mounts.
In the races in the evening, the Roman ride was the first event, and was an exhibition that required real skill upon the part of the rider. He stood on the backs of two horses, and rode around the track at a fast gallop. The motorcycle jump proved the real thrill though, when one of the machines ran up the incline and jumped nearly 20 feet through space. That scandalized the crowd to the extent that the affair was called off for the evening, as some of them remarked, to prolong the time before the murder.
William R. Coats, of Seattle, left for his home Friday. He had spent most of the summer here working in the Coats mill.
