COAXING YOU TO SMILE.

Self Defense.

In a crowded omnibus a stout woman vainly endeavored to get her fare out of the pocket of her cloak, which was tightly buttoned as a precaution against pickpockets.

After she had been working in vain for some minutes, a gentleman seated on her right said: "Please allow me to pay your fare."

The lady declined with some acerbity and recommenced her attacks on the pocket.

After these had continued for some little time her fellow passenger said: "You really must let me pay your fare. You have already undone my suspenders three times, and I cannot stand it any longer."

The Super

Theodore Thespian, leaned on the rail of his sea-going yacht soliloquizing about love, while the blue waves rolled and heaved splendidly, each blue wave being a "super" canvas.

But the waves were here and there threadbare, and suddenly a wave ripped and a head bobbed up in the midst of the heaving sea and stared around in bewildered fashion.

Theodore Thespian silenced the audience's titters with one stern glance. "Man overboard!" he yelled in stentorian tones. Then the "super" managing to draw back his head through the hole in the wave, disappeared.

Theodore heaved a stormy sigh. "Another victim seized by the relentless sea, alas!" he said. And down came the house with roars of applause.

Thrift Stamp the Prize.

One afternoon a woman was walking through a suburban village, when she noticed a small boy leaning on a gate in front of one of the residences. The boy's attitude did not betray any great amount of ambition.

"I am surprised to see you standing here, my little man," said the woman kindly. "Why do you idle away your time on such a beautiful afternoon?"

"I am not idling," definitely declared the boy. "I am working for a thrift stamp."

"Working for a thrift stamp?" wonderingly responded the woman, who couldn't see any signs of labor.

"Yes, ma'am," returned the boy. "Mr. Smith is sitting on the veranda with sister, and he told me he would give me the price of a thrift stamp if I would watch for father."

Natural History.

Along the hard, dry, wind-swept road in a suburb came a drove of pigs—a most unusual spectacle in London of recent years. From the by-roads the children of the poor came hurriedly to see and it was clear from their comments that many of them had never seen a pig before.

"Look Lizer!" cried one of the smallest among them, "Look, there's a piebald one."

"Course there is, stoopid," said Lizer, who was clearly well versed in natural history. "Where else do yer think they get streaky bacon from?"

Probably a Miser.

"The trouble with my father," said one youth to another, "is that he has no idea of the value of money."

"Do you mean that he is a spend-thrift?" asked the other.

"No, not at all. Quite the reverse. He puts all of his money away, and doesn't seem to have the slightest appreciation of all the good things he might spend it on."

Plumb Plain Unthinkable.

The National Grange, an organization of nearly a million farmers, opposes the so-called Plumb plan for the purchase by the people of the railroads and their operation by railway employees. The people, says a statement issued by the Grange, will have to foot the bill for such an experiment, should it be undertaken. "It is unthinkable," the statement continues, "that the basic functions of government should be surrendered to this unreasonable demand."

Rubber Stamps.

The southern senators are a sorry lot of rubber stamps. They have but one hymn:

"O, to be nothing, nothing Only to lie at his feet An empty and broken in vessel For the Master's use made meet."

They are for Shantung. Or against it. They are for the fourteen points. In whole. In part. Or not at all. They change politics as the President changes. He can offer them no problem in self abasement that they cannot solve. One has respect for President Wilson's autocracy, but who can respect his serfs? Every thoughtful man knows that there is no longer any will of their own among the southern senators. They whine in the cloak rooms and line up on the floor. They are not senators. They are rubber stamps.—Ohio Republican.

Deathless Spirit That Peat Hun.

I'm not dead—I'm damned if I'll die! was what Robert Graves, captain of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, called out on the battle front when he heard the stretcher bearers say: "They've got him!" And he lived to write a stirring poem about it, says the Atlantic Constitution, and the incident furnished a theme for other singers, who pointed the moral of the utterance on the never-give-up line.

Here is another story of heroism and devotion which came to light through the Red Cross.

Just before the armistice there were two brothers in an American command, and one watched the other go over the top and saw him fall.

In spite of stern protest the brother who was not in charge crawled, under fire, to the fallen one, and bore him back, where it was found that he was dead.

"I told you," said the captain, "it was useless—taking a risk like that!" "No" was the reply. "I have been abundantly rewarded! He had life enough left to clasp his arms around my neck and whisper: 'Tom I knew you'd come!'"

"MOVIE" EVIDENCE.

Fate of U-Boat Crews May Depend on Films Taken by Enemy.

Nine thousand feet of motion picture film may decide the fate of a number of German submarine commanders in the event that they are brought to trial by the allies, according to the American officers who have seen the pictures. These films show the sinking of 30 allied ships by U-boats and were made by the crews of German submarines, who unwittingly provided evidence against themselves, the Yankees declared.

The set of original films was captured by the American army in Coblenz. The films were taken to a moving picture theatre and projected before officials of the third army. So perfectly was every detail of the sinking shown that American officers said the evidence could not have been better, even if made by the allies for the purpose for which it is now proposed they be used.

The picture series begin with the U-boats leaving their bases and threading their way through the mine fields of the North sea. The next scene shows the interior of a submarine, depicting the excitement when the first allied ship is sighted. The third view depicts the launching of the torpedo. This is followed by a "close up" of the ship slowly sinking and the crew scrambling into the small boats.

Another graphic picture shows a U-boat officer ordering the captain of the sinking ship to turn over his log book. The film portrays the angry captain standing in a boat alongside the half-submerged submarine, shaking his fist at the German officer, who laughs and orders him to come aboard, where is made prisoner. Other scenes depict the Germans shelling ships to hasten their destruction.

Altogether, the death throes of 30 ships are pictured in the films captured by the Yankees. In several scenes the U-boats are shown towing small boats with survivors aboard with the caption: "Our men show humanity to the enemy." These pictures were shown through out Germany during the war to stimulate U-boat recruiting and patriotism.

How President Wilson's Self Determination Worked Out.

Leslie M. Shaw, former governor of Iowa, and Secretary of the Treasury under McKinley and Roosevelt, says, in speaking of the league of nations covenant: "The fourteen conditions of peace laid great stress on the doctrine of self-determination. But in fact four men, no one of whom found it advisable to have anyone associated with him big enough or experienced enough to give advice, have looked over the world and arbitrarily stated to one people after another: 'This is henceforth your flag which you must love and defend. Your wishes are immaterial for we are removing seeds of bitterness and causes of war. Not satisfied with Europe they have secured Japan as a member state by permanently ceding her Korea which she formally annexed in the face of a solemn treaty that she would defend her independence. They have also given to Japan the territory which Germany had wrested from China—about 40,000 people if I am rightly advised, and have clinched the rivets of their annexation without asking the consent of China or of the people arbitrarily transferred. Then they have bound the United States to conscript her sons if necessary to see to it that China shall not get back her territory and her people. The statement in the Declaration of Independence, 'Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed,' remains as true as when Jefferson penned the immortal passage, but the fact stares us in the face that Japan is to have the unjust power to rule eight million Koreans and 49,000,000 Chinaman against their consent and on the naked order of four truly great men, who are bent upon producing a universal reign of brotherly love. This will doubtless be ratified by the United States Senate, but in some of the states there is an element who, while they do not criticize they very seriously regret that their truly great President found it necessary to abandon most of his fourteen conditions of peace in order to secure Japan as one of the charter members of the league."

Senator Ransdell unctiously says there were no embalmed beef scandals during the recent war. So small a matter as the embalmed beef outcry of 1898 wouldn't have made a ripple on the surface during the present administration.
