> "Anyone who wants to go by motor take the train," is the warning of Monte Lemann at the Portland Hotel. Mr. Lemann left Portland Tuesday, and it required two days for him to get to Garibaldi, where he is interested in the immense mill which was constructed there and never operated. The main trouble is that the heavy rains have caused the detour roads to be almost impassable. There are many new grades which have not been surfaced with rock, with the result that a car slips and slides and glides and gets nowhere in the goo. Before the rains the trip could be made in 61/2 hours, but not now. Assurances are given that the sawmill at Garibaldi will be placed in operation within the near future. The plant is said to have more than $1,-000,000 of machinery in it.-Oregon-

While driving his seven passenger Studebaker car on Sunday afternoon near the Johnson bridge, Clark Embum's machine caught fire. Mrs. Embum, who was riding with her husband first detected that something was wrong by the smell. Clark hought it was simply backfire, and driving at a good rate of speed, fire soon shot up from under the car. Clark drove the car to the side of the fence and the occupants managed to get out without any injury. Fire soon spread over the car and notwithstanding the efforts of persons in the neighborhood to save the car, it was damaged to a great extent, so much so that it is a question whether it is any use. The fire fighters managed to save the wheels, on which were four new tires. The machine was partly insured. Clark is of the opinion that the fire originated from back fire as he had experienced trouble before, the car having previously caught fire, but with no serious damage. G. B. McLeod, of the Hammond Lumber Co., and Wells Gilbert, of the Wilson River Lumber Co., appeared before the Board of Equalization in regard to the valuation of their timber lands that were burned over, which is more extensive than most people thought. Shows Old Missions.

"Captain Courtesy" is a thrilling Paramount photoplay, starring Dustin Farnum, which is to be shown at the Gem Friday Sept 12,. The plot is laid in the early forties when California was under Mexican rule, and when the missions served alike the purpose of school, church and place of refuge.

The play has ben elaborately produced and no expense or pains have been spared to make it realistic to the smallest detail. The pictures of the old missions are exactly as they stand today, and Thursday, September 18, in a new some exceptionally fine interiors have been obtained. The old San Fernado Mission is made the scene of the most stirring events of the picture and the mountain scenery is most effective.

Bids Wanted.

Bids for the erection of a play shed will be received by the District Clerk of District No. 6, on or before 1 p.m. September, 22nd, 1919. Specifications can be seen at the office of the Nestucca Valley Enterprise. The school board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

Famous Actress Here in New Play.

Madlaine Traverse, who has already proved in this city her great ability as a screen actress, has been booked at the Gem Theatre for next William Fox photoplay called "When Fate Decides."

This play is described as giving Miss Traverse not only opportunity to display those unusual emotional powers that have drawn so large a following to this beautiful and stylish woman, but to prove again her exquisite taste in dress. An advance synopsis of the play shows that Miss Traverse, as Vera Loudon, gets from one desperate situation into another, but through startling episodes uses all her womanliness and cleaverness to extricate herself and the man she

OS WEST PLAYS POLITICS.

In the Spruce Production of the Northwest.

Os West, democratic ex-governor of Oregon, played politics when the spruce division was being organized on the Pacific Coast, as will be seen by what took place at the spruce investigation in Portland, and who is responsible for the removal of ex- Newell was charged with a like perienced lumber men and loggers at offense, the check being endorsed by a time when the services of the big saw mill owners and big logging which was cashed by Nelson and Co. companies were needed, even if they of Bay City, in the sum of $19.40. did own large sawmills and large tracts of timber, for they were the charged with violating the fishing men who could and would have law, and these cases were transferred made a success of the spruce prodc- from the justice court for a ruling of

And because Mr. Russell Hawkins, of the Whitney Co., and George S. Long, secretary of the Weyerhauser Lumber Co., had become connected with the spruce production ,and not belonging to the West went to Washington and had them removed, the ex-Governor making the plea that they were connected with large timber interests. While other people were doing their bit to keeping them in the county jail unplaying politics, and in removing the judge came over to pass sentence, men from the spruce division who had the experience and should have been put in charge of the spruce production, not men who knew noth- prison feed bill come higher. In pasing whatever about milling and logging, and a lot of officers in the spruce division who did not know the difference between spruce and hemlock trees. Hence the wilful waste, the costly cost plus system and the rotten method of paying $115,000 per mile to build logging roads that could have been built for $15,000 a mile. This is the bit of evidence in regard to Os West's interference in which he played politics:

"Os West, ex-governor of Oregon, testify regarding his previous testimony before the senate military affairs committee, which touched upon the removal of George S. Long of Tacoma, secretary of the Weverhaeuser Lumber company, from official position in spruce production. In substance Mr. West assured the committee that he took sole responsibility for the removal of both Mr. Long and Russell Hawkins, a Portland lumberman, with the Whitney company, from spruce production affairs. Without reflecting on the personal integrity, he held the belief that their close connection with large private timber interests would not be conductive to a proper administration of spruce production.

The witness related his first meeting with Colonel Disque, at Portland headquarters, on December 24, 1917, He was on the eve of departure for Washington. Understanding that Colonel Disque was having difficulty in getting official attention paid to his requirements and appreciating the necessity for speeding up production, Mr. West went to him to offer his services during the Washington visit. During that visit to Washington and at subsequent visits, solely on his own initiative, he had advocated the removal of Long and Hawkins, at conferences with Secretary of War Baker and with the aircraft board. He had declined to see Major F. W. Leadbetter, then in Washington, because of former political animosity, but had later called him up and offered to bury the hatchet, in the interests of co-operation in airplane production.

In talking with Secretary Baker he had been told that the spruce program appeared to place too much individual power in the hands of Colonel Disque and to name men eligible for posts as advisers to Disque, Among his recommendations were the names of Amos Benson, James Bremner, R. B. Inman and S. B. Cobb.

Senator Chamberlain had at that ime received a message from J. C. Ainsworth of Portland, referring to the possibility of Russell Hawkins receiving a commission. The witness said he had advised the Senator to keep his hands off, that "there are breakers ahead."

Subsequently he had told Secretary Baker of Mr. Hawkins' connections with the Whitney Lumber Company. The latter had agreed with him that the Hawkins head must fall, because it was "difficult for a man to serve

Mr. West testified that Major Leadbetter, at a time when plaining mill contracts were under consideration. witness then representing that branch of Oregon industry in Washington conferences, had mentioned his (Leadbetter's) connection with the Charles K. Spaulding Lumber company, and had said: "In view of that I don't feel free to participate at all."

"I've explained to you about the Hawkins matter," said Mr. West. "Nobody except myself had anything to do with that. I brought that to the attention of the secretary of war."

A great deal has been written about that wonderful device of modern warfare—the creeping barrage. For the first time a creeping barrage has been put on the screen with really graphic details by D. W. Griffith in his new photoplay "The Greatest Thing in Life" in which Lillian Gish has the stallar part and which will be shown at the Gem Theatre next Tuesday, Sept. 16. It is a remarkable battle scene. No printed words can adequately describe this curtain of fire under the protection of which our Yank boys have repeatedly marched into the Hun trenches. You can see the heavy smoke clouds sweeping forward as though by the force of some unseen giant hand moving steadily toward the enemy trenches on a hill. You can see the shells exploding. It is so vivid that you can almost hear the crash. Through the curtain of cloud a bombing aeroplane takes its perlious flight; now up almost in the real clouds; now darting like an angry wasp through the smoke and reek of of the battle, just above the trenches,

The creeping barraeg is a development of the war. Before the days of such intensive artillery fire such a tactical device was never dreamed of. This is the first visualization available to those at home.

Death of Mrs. Antone Plasker.

Mrs. Antone Plasker died last Saturday morning, September 6th, at 5 a.m., at her home, at the age of 55 years and 8 months. She was born in Germany, January 6th, 1864, and came to this country with her parents when a girl of fifteen years old in 1879. They made their home in Sterns County, Minn.

She was married to Antone Plasker at Duelm, Benton County, Minn., on Nov. 20th, 1883, living there for 18 years. They came to Tillamook Oregon, in 1896, where she lived with her husband and family until death called her.

Thirteen children were born, of whom twelve are living to mourn her departure. Those left to mourn her departure are Antone Plasker, her husband, Henry, Welhelmina, Joseph, Benny, Clara, Rose, Leo and John, of Tillamook; Clemens Plasker, of Santa Clara Calif; Mrs. T. J. Healey, of Portland, Ore.; Mrs. Chas Kuper, of Mohler, Oregon. Interment was held at Sacred Heart Cemetery on Monday, Sept. 8, Rev. Father Martin officiating. The deceased was a most affectionate wife and devoted mother and she was beloved by a large number of friends.
