DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Headin' South." An ARTCRAFT Picture

THURSDAY, Oct. 2,

Fatty Arbuckle in

"CAMPING OUT."

Pity the poor, hen-pecked husband. He's so delicate, too. The mere physical strain of existence is quite enough for this ill-natured spouse. Why add matrimonial sufferings? What's he going to do? Go camping. Leave his "happy home" behind him. He meets a "Sweet Young Thing" at the camp. Friend wife shows up. Just leave it to Fatty. He'll be slright at the finish. Don't fail to see Fatty in this one. It's great.

Everybody ought to be thankful that the old, dirty, unsanitary barn is being torn down. There was always an unsavory smell about the barn, for it was placed there, as most people believed at the time, to annoy others.

Now that the schools have started, it would be a good idea if most of them would make arrangements to have an exhibit at the next county fair. We were a little disappointed at the poor showing made at the recent county fair, when only a few district schools had exhibits.

Probably few persons have noticed the fact that in a large number of the dynamite crimes in the United States, the names of Irishmen have been implicated in the guilt proven against them. It looks as though the Irish in the United States are adopting the same methods in this country as they did in old Ireland.

Talk about German propaganda. What's the matter with the propaganda that the country is being flooded with by the democratic government simply to whip the United States senate into line. It's no use, the people of the country see that this is nothing more or less than democratic bull dozeism.

It is a good thing to see so many old shacks and fire traps being pulled down, to make room for more modern up-to-date structures. Even the old Headlight building is doomed and the unsightly shack will soon disappear. Let the good work go on until all the frame buildings and old fire traps are removed from the business center of the city. Those that remain are a menace to the city, as well as a menace to the modern buildings and the large and valuable stocks of goods that are being carried by the business men of this city.

"The President says there is an international agreement for disarmament in the league of nations," said Senator Poindexter. "I think he made that statement a number of times—that there is an international agreement for disarmament or for a limitation of armaments in the league of nations. Without desiring to dispute the President's statement too categorically or to seem offensive, I wish to say there is no such provision in the covenant of the league of nations—none whatever. There is nothing in the covenant of the league of nations to that effect."

We feel glad to know that the American Legion organized in Tillamook county, and we wish it success. The Legion is going to be a strong factor in behalf of a more thorough, genuine patriotism in the United States, and for a long time such an organization was needed to "swat" the foreign soap box orators and agitators who have come to the United States to stir up strife and trouble. The Legion will not only declare war on that class of foreigners, but will see to it that persons who have become naturalized citizens are 100 per cent American.

We have been endeavoring to fathom the reason why the Oregon Voter took such an untenable position in defending General Disque and the wilful waste of money in the spruce division. To our way of judging, it looks as though a number of prominent democrats did their best to white wash the General, but having made such a poor job, it is not to be wondered that they should continue to do a little whitewashing in the democratic newspapers as well. Any blind person going into the Yeon building and finding 150 officers, some of them doing office boy's work would know that something was wrong somewhere.

In the face of the fact that Germany from the beginning has been showing friendliness to President Wilson's covenant for the league of nations and has been showing it on the theory that it will enable Germany by entering into the arrangement, to regain to a large extent a position of influence in world affairs, Wilson is now advancing the astonishing argument that pro-Germanism is one of the influences in Washington and in the country that is trying to force modification in the covenant. Surprise has been caused that the President should indulge in assertions of such character, especially when they are levelled at senators whose Americanism cannot be questioned by anyone who cares to deal with the facts. As a matter of fact the President's talk of pro-Germanism so far as can be discerned is not taken seriously in any quarter and least of all by public men who are on terms of perfect familiarity with the record of the Administration since the fateful summer of 1914 when the conflagration in Europe broke out.

What is one to believe anyway? By reports brought from Russia by an official of the ministry of trade of that country, he says that Russia has a record crop in this year. Yet for all that we are still reading long articles in the daily newspapers that the United States must feed starving Europe. If the government would prevent the export of wheat, corn, meats etc., from the United States, and take more interest in the welfare of the people of this country it would soon bring down the cost of living, but there appears to be a lot of silly sentimentalism in first feeding the people of Europe, taking away food stuffs that should remain at home to feed our own people. The reason that flour, and bread remains so high is because the democratic administration is more concerned about feeding the people of Europe than it is our own citizens. The party that kept us out of war made us eat all kinds of unpalatable "substitutes," thereby enabling the profiteers to make millions of dollars on account of the government forcing us to eat hog feed.

The burning question now before the people of the United States is whether the treaty of peace and the league of nations are to be accepted as brought back from France by President Wilson, precisely as they are written or to have such reservations ingrafted into them as will absolutely safeguard American rights, constitutional, domestic and traditional, and fully protect our independence of action as a nation in the future. President Wilson appeared to be the whole thing as far as the United States interests were concerned at the peace conference, the other members appearing to be nothing but figure heads. There is no serious opposition to the treaty of peace or to the league of nations covenant, which is made part of the treaty, but there are certain provisions which should be amended to safeguard the United States and right several wrongs that are in the treaty, such as Shantung, Fiume, etc. The Democrats are lined up with President Wilson for the passage of the treaty and league precisely as written, and Republicans are striving to safeguard the United States by the introduction of reservations. A great deal of trouble would have been eliminated had President Wilson consulted with the United States Senate and taken that body into his confidence, but instead of doing so he antagonized it and made the foolish statement that the senators had "pigmy minds." Should the United States Senate pass the treaty and league covenant just as presented to them, and should something crop up afterwards that was not right and proper in the treaty and covenant, the people would say immediately the senators had pigmy minds to agree to them without proper discussion and amendment. If the Senate had a majority of Democrats, no doubt, the president could feel safe in demanding that they vote as President Wilson dictated, but there is a majority of republicans in the senate and they do not propose to be brow beaten into doing something that will not safeguard the United States. There is going to be amendments and reservations placed in the treaty and covenant of nations whether President Wilson likes it or not, and his endeavor to prevent it have met with a frost.

Trying to Kid Him.

Down at Kelly field an instructor left on a furlough and his cadets were assigned to other "flights" for their flying practice. By mistake one was attached to a "circus" squad.

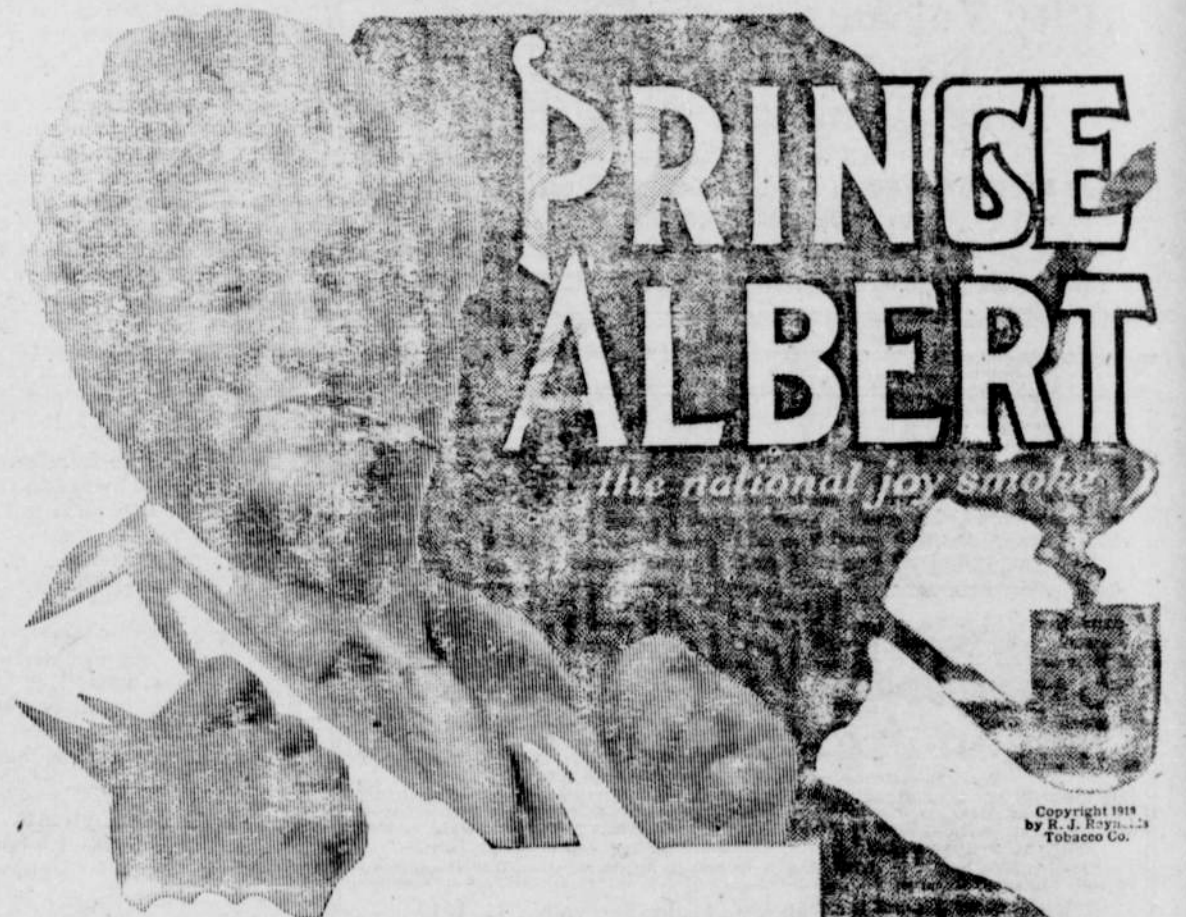

When his turn came he climbed into the rear pit and the instructor took him up to 6,000 feet, swung the machine into a spiral nose dive, and waved his arms above his head to indicate that the cadet should right the machine.

When the machine had dropped to 2,500 feet, gaining momentum rapidly, the instructor became alarmed and looked back at the cadet, who waved his arms above his head and grinned. The pilot grabbed the controls and made a safe landing.

The cadet explained that this was his first flight, and he thought the instructor was trying to kid him when he waved, so he pretended he wasn't scared.

Mexico to Restore Ruin.

The palace of Cortez, in the suburbs of Coyoacan, is to be reconstructed by the government and used as a museum for relics of the Spanish conquest. The structure, 400 years old, has been allowed to fall into ruins. In the courtyard are ancient trees, under which Hernan Cortez and his familiars were wont to rest. These are hundreds of years older than the ancient building itself. The chapel attached to the palace is still in good condition.
