

SHE CAN'T FORGET

The Traveller—"Just renewing acquaintances"
The West—"Oh, I remember you. It was you who kept us out of war"—until after election"

What the Editors Say

Mr. Wilson continues to inform an astonished world that his pet league nations will keep us out of war. At the people don't want any more Mr. Wilson's way of "keeping us out of war." It has proved too expensive and fatal.—Economist.

We trail along with the erudite editor of the Oregon Voter in a majority of things, but when he can find it in his heart to find excuse for the spruce disgrace of the Pacific coast we can do nothing for him but admire his nerve and deplore his poor eyesight.—Gazette Times.

President Wilson's plans for reducing the high cost of living are: Ram through the League of Nations covenant regardless of what is in it; vote more money for the various public bureaus of the administration; give the president more power, and speed Europe.—Flushing (N. Y.) Daily Times.

In Los Angeles enterprising casket manufacturers are buying up the costly mahogany bars of the saloons of former days in the city, and are working both the wood and metal trimmings into caskets. Saloons have sent many men to their coffins, and it is but fitting that all that was valuable in them should find its final resting place in a coffin as well.—Critic.

While we are ripping great orifices in the circumambient atmosphere over the League of Nations and other foreign tomfoolery, let Congress not forget that the greatest need of the American people right now is a Protective Tariff law that will protect American industries and American labor against the cheap labor products of European and Asiatic countries.—The Rooseveltian.

Why should the American people have thrust upon them the task of "saving the poor people of the old country from starving?" Most of those "starving people" are myths, and the rest that are in need of help, are about as industrious as were our American Indians fifty years ago. If those propagandists who want Europe and Asia "saved" would devote their time to America, a great deal more good would be accomplished.—Willamina Times.

If the government is to buy the railroads, why not the packing houses? And if the packing houses why not the steel business, the newspapers, and then the automobile business? It would only take two or three hundred billions to make a clean sweep and we could all go on a vacation while the government officials did the work. They are trying the scheme out in Russia now and to a limited extent in North Dakota. Why not adopt as a national slogan, "no-body works but Uncle Sam?"—Salem Journal.

Another "crimp" has been put in Wilson's league of nations propaganda by the announcement that Secretary Lansing is about to step down and out of his job at Washington. Slowly, but surely, even the strongest admirers of President Wilson are beginning to see the light of day and one by one are shuffling off that "mortal coil" that has been thrust about them by the head of the nation whose chief endeavor seems to be that of rule or ruin in an effort to accomplish his selfish desires.—Umpqua Valley News.

Mr. Root in his address before the American Bar Association recently struck the truth when he said that the greatest need of the present is a government of laws and not of men. One of the conditions that the war has produced is "that moral attitude in which law is held in low esteem," and any man who happens to be in power feels that he can act according to his own will. Speaking of the high cost of living, he said that never before in this country has there been so much difficulty in getting the ordinarily industrious person of common sense down to work.—Telephone Register.

What do you think of this? Mr. Hoover says unless this government can loan to foreign countries $4,000,000,000 in the very near future with which to buy our goods, there is going to be the greatest slump in prices in the United States that our people have ever known. And Mr. Hoover is busy urging this loan! Mr. Hoover is one part of a branch of the American government—the head of it. While for the past month the President and the public have been advocating something to reduce the cost of living, here is an important head of a department advocating the doing of something to prevent the lowering of the high cost of living.—Gazette Times.

"Try the League but keep prepared for war," is the advice of General March, Chief of Staff; a very much modernized variant of the classic "Trust in God, but keep your powder dry." The use of poison gas by Germany was unjustifiable, but it had to be met by similar tactics by the Allies. And if German in the late war thus employed illegal means, there is no assurance that she or some other country will not do the same again. Therefore the United States should be at all time prepared for such an event. Evidently the Chief of Staff does not share the President's confidence in the infallibility of the League as a preventive of war.—Harper's Weekly.

Secretary Lansing has been an outstanding figure in the group of figureheads which the president grouped about him in the form of a cabinet and his record indicates that there was at least one man who knew his job, but it is now said that he will retire. The veil of secrecy which surrounded the peace negotiations notwithstanding the promise of open diplomacy prevented details from reaching the world, but enough has leaked out to indicate that Secretary Lansing differed sharply from his chief upon features of the peace treaty and league of nations pact, but the latter ignored the state department as he had previously ignored the senate and proceeded with his one-man idea.—Independent.

"All over this country" said the President at Seattle. "It is becoming more and more evident that those who were the partisans of Germany are the ones who are primarily pleased with some of the aspects of the debate that is now going on." We do not think the president strengthens his case with such insinuations. In the first place, the debating is not all on one side. The president is now carrying it to the country, rather than assent to any manner of reservation of interpretation, and prolonging in the open field of public controversy the debate which the spokesmen have been keeping up by his direction in the senate. Yet he has said again and again that the covenant means exactly what the advocates of reservations are trying to have the senate express in different wording.—Spokesman Review.

If we mistake not the sentiments of the people President Wilson will go back to Washington convinced that he must accept the senate modifications of the peace treaty and the league of nations compact. Even the newspapers that have been supporting the president are changing front. The most notable instance in this section is the Oregonian, published in Portland. This publication has insisted upon the adoption of the president's plan until the last few days. In the news columns the Oregonian admits that the president is not winning the expected support in his effort to cram his policy down the throats of the senators. If the president shows a disposition to be reasonable the fair-minded republicans will see to it that the senate does not spill the beans entirely by making necessary another peace treaty with Germany. Nobody wants that.—Observer.

The Sentinel and other papers which had the nerve to denounce Townley and his Non-partisan league have been vindicated. Townley and his secretary, Joseph Gilbert, have been sentenced to serve three months in a Minnesota jail for disloyal conduct and actions and were given no alternative of paying a fine. In imposing sentence the judge excoriated the culprits for the false reports of the trial given in the Townley newspapers, as well as for unjust criticism of court and jury. Oregon may well thank the country press for starting a campaign that scared the Townley non-partisan organizers out of our state. Townleyism is already hitting the toboggan and it is more than likely that in the next general election it will be ousted from North Dakota, where it had its inception and where it found a congenial atmosphere for propagation.—The Sentinel.

Since the Oregon Voter opines that spruce production waste was justified, by lauding Brice P. Disque and malingering Senators Frear and Magee for their method of investigation into Disque's conduct of spruce production, then it must hold that sinning is no sin. If there was swastika which the Voter says there was, then some one was responsible. For it was government work. And Brice P. Disque was the head of this work as the government's employee. The Voter goes so far in its laudatory comment to say that Mr. Disque spent millions on millions without being frightened. Why should he be? Any man can spend millions on millions without being frightened providing the money is not his own. And it was the people's money that comes eventually through taxation, that Disque was spending. If Disque was not to blame which the Voter vigorously asserts he was not, then someone must have been, and we must look higher—to his employer, the Wilson administration.—Sheridan Sun.

The Charge of the Thirteen Hundred

(More than 1,300 persons were on the president's excursion to Paris.)
Over the mighty sea,
Shrouded in mystery,
None knowing what would be
What might be sundered,
"Charge" did the captains say—
Bills were so much a day,
Public would have to pay
For thirteen hundred.
"Forward, the Peace Brigade,"
Was there a man afraid?
Not though the senate thought
Some one had blundered.
Scholars of many books,
Relatives, maids and cooks,
Kodaks on tender hooks
Made thirteen hundred.
Flashed their commissions fair,
Flashed here, there, everywhere,
Making the old world stare—
Gaul, Teuton, wondered,
(Such a trip costs a penny)
Jacques stared, and also Jenny,
Why did we send so many—
Full thirteen hundred?
Some went to Northern lands,
Some looked on torrid sands,
Some hunted tropic strands—
Fame loudly thundered;
Right on they kept their way,
Charging so much per day,
Pole, Greek and Russian
Looked on this proud array,
All the world wondered,
Every tongue loud did say:
"Hail, thirteen hundred."
Motor cars right of them,
Picture shows left of them,
Poems in praise of them
Volleyed and thundered.
Not under shot and shell,
Hardships but few to tell,
Gay as a marriage bell
Back o'er the mighty sea,
To our land fair and free,
Came thirteen hundred.
What did they really do,
That is for me and you?
Everywhere laurels grew;
No doubt they plundered.
Still now the scroll unfold,
What mighty deeds are rolled!
Tell when the babes grow old
Of thirteen hundred.—
Economist.

Burning Money.

Life is gay and blithe and sunny since the peace dove hit the breezes; every one is burning money just as though it grew on trees. I insist on thrift and saving, but there's none to heed my words; Jonnies say that I am raving, and throw money to the birds. Men are drawing princely wages, and their breasts are filled with mirth, and they jeer forboding sages who predict a day of dearth; but that day will come as surely as tomorrow's sun will rise; things will then be going poorly with the giddy spending thrift guys. Things won't boom along forever as they're booming now, my friends; and the man who's truly clever saves as ably as he spends. It is patient to the knowing, in expensive times like these, that the koeksups won't be growing always and the shrubs and trees. There will come a day of trouble, when this boom is left behind, and the koeksups and the ruble will be mighty hard to find; happy then the lad whose wages have been safely placed in brine, when the saving graft was fine. And how sick will be the mortals who like spendthrifts now behave, who reply with jeers and chorries when we call on them to save!—Walt Mason.

You must set the kidneys working right.
A resident of this vicinity shows you how.
Mrs. Kenneth Chase, 1214 S. River St., Newberg, Ore., says: "My back ached all the time and my kidneys acted irregularly. My feet and ankles were so badly swollen that in the morning, I couldn't get my shoes on for several hours. The first few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills helped me wonderfully. My back stopped aching, my kidneys acted more regularly and the swellings in my feet and ankles went down. After I had taken one box of Doan's Kidney Pills, I felt as well as ever."
