What the Editors Say

There is a marked difference between conditions existing now and a year ago. Despite the severity of the weather people seem to be healthy. At least the doctors report very little sickness. A year ago now nearly everybody had the flu and deaths were so numerous to be appalling.—Itemizer.

The public will be inclined to side with Fuel Administrator Garfield, who sees danger to consumers in the settlement of the coal strike dictated by President Wilson. This settlement provides for a price-fixing body composed of one operator, one miner and a third party selected by the first two. While operators and miners have been fighting bitterly, Mr. Garfield believes if their common interests—high wages and high selling prices—are threatened they will unite in price making and the third party will be a figurehead.—Independent.

The custom that prevailed during the war to force unpatriotic citizens to kiss their country's flag should not continue. The plan doesn't cause such a citizen to love the flag or to make him more loyal. It may curb his unloyal propensities for a time. Disloyal citizens should be expatriated. They should not be given an opportunity to continue to live under the protecting folds of Old Glory. The person who harbors anarchistic theories should be made to go out and seek an anarchistic government. Don't insult the flag by having a disloyal citizen press his lips to its colors.—News-Reporter.

There is more than ten thousand grangers in Oregon. For many years the grange has been one of the greatest factors in national progress. Parcel post, equal suffrage, direct legislation and many other good things were planted and grew in grange halls, amid the social life of our best citizenship. Weighty matters are now on for a tryout. Are farmers responsible for the high cost of their products? Is the prevailing unrest due to our national growth or decay? Is reaction necessary in the high cost of living? Or, shall we begin price fixing for everything? The farmers are going to help answer these questions, and will try to answer them in the interest of the people as a whole.—Telephone Register.

Dr. Garfield resigned his position as fuel director because the compromise settlement proposed by the president was "contrary to fundamental principles of government." If all the government officials resigned every time the president proposes something contrary to fundamental principles, there wouldn't be any officials. He cares less for fundamentals than any man on earth, nor is there anybody in the world, or in the heavens above or in the waters under the earth who so strictly obeys the injunction, to take no thought of tomorrow, but let the morrow take care of itself. The main thing with Mr. Wilson always is to get trouble out of his way even if it is done by compounding it for the future.—Gazette Times.

Farmers Will Not Unite With Labor.

Refusal of farm organizations to join the American Federation of Labor in the conference called by Mr. Gompers and now in session at Washington was foreshadowed by utterances of heads of farm associations and the agricultural press. The national grange, in annual convention, by resolution sent this curt telegram to Mr. Gompers: "The national grange declines your invitation for a conference in Washington, December 13."

A resolution of the Farmers' National congress declared: "We know that the 44-hour week cannot feed the world and we proclaim that it can not clothe it."

Milo D. Campbell, chairman of the National Board of Farm organizations, gave the following reasons for declining Mr. Gompers' invitation: "Events of the year, and particularly of the last few weeks, have, in my opinion, alienated much of the good will toward organized labor that was previously in the heart of the farmers. For this condition you may not be responsible, nor other sane and conservative members of the A. F. of L. I think I can appreciate the difficult position you hold, but at this moment your team is running away. We, as farmers, would be glad to aid in stopping them, but not to ride in the wagon. We do want the right to sell collectively our farm products and the right to buy our necessities collectively; but we do not ask the right to impose our collective agent upon any purchaser, nor the right to tell any purchaser, if he does not want our collected products at the price we name, that he must arbitrate, or that he must not supply his wants from any other source if he would avoid trouble."

The incidental circumstance that Victor Berger's radical socialist organ urged the farmers to unite with labor "and conquer" added nothing to Mr. Gompers' appeal.

Only one farmer showed up for the Washington conference, which is avowedly both economic and political. The labor leaders, while confessing their disappointment, asserted their purpose to continue the effort to bring the agricultural workers into a political alliance. It is now apparent though, that the effort will not succeed. Even though an appearance of farmers representation might yet be brought about it will be appearance rather than reality, for the rank and file of the country's growers are against the proposed coalition.—Spokesman Review.

Scraps of Paper.

Mr. Gompers now controls both the Department of Labor and the Department of Commerce, but he doesn't seem to cut much figure with Palmer or Burleson.

Presumably Mr. McAdoo will never get so desperate as to attack the profits of his indigent clients, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglass Fairbanks.

If the Democrats are hard up for an issue how would it do for them to accept the Wilsonian theory of government in toto and declare in favor of the repeal of the Constitution, and the abolition of Congress?

President Wilson must be right in his claim that he is the exclusive manager of American foreign affairs. Didn't he keep us out of war until after the campaign of 1916 all by himself?

How could anyone have doubted the authorship of that last presidential message? Wasn't it a beautiful bunch of rhetoric that meant most anything in general and nothing in particular.

Vice President Marshall says he is in favor of an "industrious democracy." "Industrial democracy" makes a much better political phrase. It rather conveys the idea of everybody being his own boss and not making himself work.

A British subject who was seized by Mexican bandits was rescued promptly by the Carranza government on demand of the British consul. You'll have to give old whiskers credit for knowing whose dog he can prudently kick around.

The deliberateness with which the administration got into and gets out of war reminds one of the calf whose owner said he had to pull his blamed ears off to get him to drinking the milk in the pail and his darned tail off to get him to quit.

President Wilson thinks it would be a fair division of labor for him to look after the framing of world constitutions while Congress attends to little matters like solving the labor problem and reducing the high cost of living.

If, as the democratic orator and editors said for so many years, the protective tariff was the mother of trusts, the breeder of strikes and the ancestor of profiteers, it has certainly been having an awful crop of posthumous children.

Maybe the reason the administration regards with so much equanimity the revolutionary propaganda carried on by the Carranza government in the United States is that it is believed now is the time for all "I. W. W.'s" to stand together.

Fred Howe, immigration commissioner at the port of New York, who seems to have kept open house for bolsheviks and was addressed by Emma Goldman as "Dear Fred" is another college professor in politics. Ought we not proclaim an extra day of prayer for colleges this year?

Indictments have been returned by a federal grand jury against managers of a senatorial campaign for "using the mails to defraud all the people of Michigan." Doesn't this put the authors of the Democratic national committee's 1916 literature, declaring that the re-election of Wilson would keep us out of war, in some danger?

Probably when President Carranza plotted to give to the negro of the United States the same new freedom President Wilson has been working to get for the peon of Mexico he carried the great principle too far. He ought to remember that Democratic devotion to democracy is all intended for the export trade.

Attorney General Palmer is always saying that he can't prosecute the plutocrats because there are no laws under which he can do it. And just to think that Mr. Palmer's party was in full control of both the legislative and executive departments of government for six years prior to March 4th, 1919, and, although pledged to paralyze the plutocrats and pulverize the profiteers, went out of power without having enacted laws now declared to be essential before anything can be done toward the accomplishment of that purpose.
