What the Editors Say

Clothing dealers say men's clothes will still go higher, which reminds us that matters are getting decidedly serious, for barrels have kept pace with the cost of clothes and if a man can't get clothes he can't get a barrel either.—Independent.

The Literary Digest recently sent a questionnaire to justices of the state supreme courts, to district and county judges and to heads of legal departments in our universities asking what penalties they thought should be imposed upon the kaiser if he should be found guilty, and the replies were: Exile, 137; capital punishment, 106; imprisonment, 51; other penalties, 7; against trial 27.—Telephone Register.

Samuel Gompers deprecates the efforts to form a new labor party. Sam is too good a democrat to approve of anything like that. Sam hopes to solve the labor vote body and breeches to the Democratic party as he has always tried to do in the past. This year the effort will follow along the lines so successfully adapted by the Nonpartisan party of North Dakota, which amounts to nothing more nor less than larceny and the larceny of another's franchise at that.—Gazette Times.

Labor unionists who insist upon the inalienable right to strike, as they call it, will do well to ponder the utterance of the National Grange and several other of the most important farmers' organizations in this country. Suppose, say these agriculturists, the farmers of the country should refuse to till their soil and to grow the needed food for the residents of the cities. They would justly meet with the condemnation of a united nation. As owners of the land they would have neither the legal or the moral right to do so. Very well, then. What better right would the railroad men have to go on strike, prevent transportation, and thus starve the people of the cities on the one hand and destroy the property of the farmers on the other? The answer is tersely given: "No such right has ever existed, and no such right now exists." That is the logic which Mr. Gompers cannot refute. It is an illuminative and inspiring disclosure of the sanity of mind of that element of our industrial population which far outnumbers all others, and far exceeds all others in the importance of its products.—Harvey's Weekly.

High Cost of McAdooling.
You can not run a combined Presidential and potential Presidential nomination campaign without literature, and literature costs money, even in the minor items of printing and distribution. So it is not surprising to learn from Senator Smoot that between July 1, 1916, and September 15, 1919, the Executive Department of the Government caused the printing and distribution of 1,163,862 speeches. The dead weight of these documents was 79,457 pounds, just a shade over 40 tons.

Yet, after all, the Executive's little plunge into campaign literature distribution at the expense of the taxpayers was a mere flea-bite compared with what it cost us to keep the McAdoolie light so shining before men that if they were really groping for a 1920 Presidential candidate, he, Mr. McAdoolie, would not be overlooked. The Treasury Department and the Railroad Administration combined, and both under McAdoolie control and domination, while the President's little side-show was distributing its 40 tons of advertising literature, went at the job in a whole-hearted, generous way which puts the Executive's puny efforts quite out of the running.

No less than 329 tons and over— to be exact 28,121.560 pounds— McAdoolie literature was printed, addressed, mailed, and delivered, and was thus devoted to filling a long-felt want of the American people for the real McAdoolie facts. And this while Mr. Wilson's Department was scattering abroad only 79,497 pounds or less than 40 tons!

This lavish literature distribution, as it is remembered, did not cost Mr. McAdoolie one red cent. The taxpayers footed the entire bill. Mr. McAdoolie himself at Altoona—is absolutely impeachable so far as distribution of his own personal funds is concerned. He is in a position to defy anybody living to show that he spent a penny of his own money in this campaign of publicity which he so ably conducted from the Treasury and the Railroad Administration departments.—Harvey's Weekly.

Co-operation.
"We seek to engage in a co-operative enterprise embracing every step from the production of raw materials through collection, manufacture, storage and distribution to the ultimate consumer."—Glenn E. Plumb.

Mr. Plumb's idea of co-operation is based on "beat 'em or join 'em, tails you lose." He wants to co-operate so long as he is getting the best of the bargain and there are no losses; but when it comes to losses he wants the people taxed and government compelled to pay the deficits. This is not co-operation.

Henry Ford's paper says the Republican party has "no outstanding leader." And that's all the Democratic party has and he will be standing outside after the next presidential inauguration.

The New York World says President Wilson's attitude toward Secretary Lansing is bewildering. It must be bewildering to an organ that has been following Mr. Wilson blindfolded for months and portraying him as an infallible and consistent leader.

A Column of Comment.

England is willing to accept the reservations. That makes it unanimous except for President Wilson—Wichita (Kan.) Beacon.

New Jersey is grooming Governor Edwards as a wet candidate for the presidency. The country has had enough of the New Jersey variety—Baltimore (Md.) American.

In explaining America's attitude to the friends of the league in England and Europe generally Lord Grey has performed a great service.—Evansville (Ind.) Journal-News.

When Lord Grey took his pen in hand to say that he would pass reservations and hoped Uncle Sam would do the same, he started something.—Baltimore (Md.) American.

Maybe if the democratic platform of 1916 had promised that Mr. Wilson would keep us out of sugar the supply might be both cheap and plentiful.—Cocoonino (Ariz.) Sun.

Now Hoover says he won't be a candidate. He let the New York World and the Saturday Evening Post get clear out to the end of the limb and then neatly sawed it off.—Wichita (Kan.) Beacon.

The increased price of bread, under the evidence in the case is directly chargeable to the administration at Washington which is inept at best and without a head at present.—South Bend (Ind.) Times.

From whatever angle the subject may be approached, the facts and the logic are against the uncompromising stubbornness of the advocates of the league covenant without reservations.—Warsaw (Ind.) Times.

"He kept us out of war" before the 1916 election and "We would as soon fight the British as the Germans" in four months after the election are two interesting gems of administration consistency.—Wilmington (Del.) Journal.

The American people are glad to have had the common sense expression from Lord Grey. They know now beyond peradventure that the treaty with reservations is entirely agreeable to England.—Baltimore (Md.) American.

At this moment just one force is opposing ratification of the treaty on these terms—the President of the United States. He and his advisers are silent regarding the Grey letter and the Lloyd George cablegram.—Detroit (Mich.) Free Press.

The platform of the communists announces that their party is one of action. Their growth has been due largely to the fact that President Wilson's party is one of inaction.—Washua (N. H.) Telegraph.

If the reservations are perfectly acceptable to our friends in England, why should an American object to a step which is intended to strengthen our attachment to the League by safeguarding American interests.—Dubuque (Iowa) Times-Journal.

The president is determined to find out whether this is a one man country. He has put up his judgment against that of a majority of the senate on the league question and we are about to learn whether the president is boss.—Roseburg (Ore.) News.

It is utterly impossible to consider him as a candidate for a third term. The probabilities are that he will be more or less confined to his house and his bed for the balance of his term, with the danger of a relapse if he engages in any considerable work, either physical or mental.—Nashua (N. H.) Telegraph.

Lord Grey whose mission to the United States seemed a failure, may really be the means of breaking the treaty deadlock. He ought to be. He has at least put it up to the president. His letter to the London Times has done much to clarify public opinion in both countries and to speed up official action.—Moline (Ill.) Dispatch.

If the peace treaty and the document of the league fall now, there will be no difficulty in placing the responsibility for the future. It will be upon that body of strong-headed, stubborn followers of Mr. Wilson, who join in playing personal pique and prejudice above patriotism and above the welfare of humanity.—Wheeling (W. V.) Intelligencer.

Do you remember that President Wilson wanted to refer woman suffrage "to the states," not being disposed to regard it as a national question? Well his own state of New Jersey has ratified national woman suffrage—the twenty eighth state to do it. It's just a Valentine for Mr. Wilson, added to the comic one that democratic congressmen gave him last evening.—Moline (Ill.) Dispatch.

The enactment of Senator Gronna's bill for the abolition of the wartime government control of wheat prices should be a matter of the shortest possible time. The system of wheat control served some good purposes, and while it probably increased the cost of bread to the country it did not add thereto, as the Railroad Administration did, a big deficit to be covered by the taxpayers, but on the contrary came out with a surplus estimated at $50,000,000, which will, of course, be paid to the treasury. But it has served its purpose, and could not be continued without harm to the very interests it would Cabinet members come and cabinet members go, but Baker and Burleson run on forever.

"Good-bye and God bless you," is what President Wilson said to Col. Bryan when he accepted the resignation the Colonel never offered, but that is not just exactly, but almost, what he said to Mr. Lansing.

Sir Oliver Lodge probably came over on the theory that there would be a popular demand for this kind of spirits now that the other kind is off the market.
