Coaxing You to Smile.

Too Much Color.

"Your narrative is too highly colored," remarked the editor, returning the bulky manuscript. "In what way?" inquired the disappointed author. "Why," replied the editor, "in the very first chapter you make the old man turn purple with rage, the villain turn green with envy, the hero turn white with anger, the heroine turn red with confusion and the coachman turn blue with cold."

One of Strick's.

One of Strickland Gillilan's stories in his "Sample Case of Humor" deals with the age-old theme of the inability of some English people to appreciate the American joke. An English girl was present when this countermess was asked, "How do you make a Maltese cross?"—the answer of course being, "You pull its tail." The English girl didn't smile. Finally she said, "Well of course, it's because I'm English and all that, but really I cannot see any similarity between a Maltese cross and a pullet's tail."

An Art Career.

"I think that Gladys will go on the stage," said the mother.

"Is she studying elocution or singing?"

"No, indeed. I don't want to encourage vocal exertion that might make her breath short when she dances."

Too Much Sunshine.

A noted pessimist threw down his periodical with a snort. "There's too much of this sunshine fiction being written," he said. "With prices what they are, there's too much smile stuff too much optimism altogether. A chap was talking about an optimist the other day. 'What an optimist Smiler is!' he said 'if he failed in business, he'd thank Providence he had his health; if he failed in health he'd thank Providence he had his business, and if he failed in both, he'd give a cherry optimist laugh and say: 'Oh, well, what use is the one without the other.'"

Getting It.

"Hey! Come to life!" snared an impatient customer in the rapid fire restaurant. "I want a little service here."

"Well ain't you getting little enough to satisfy you?" calmly returned Heloise the waitress.

Invisible.

Senator Lodge had been giving his views on the peace treaty and concluded, "A great many of our statesmen are trying to place the public in the position of the little boy who was discovered one day staring at a pile of bricks. 'What are you staring at those bricks for, my little man?' asked an interested observer. 'Well' answered the child, 'my mother says ice-cream comes in bricks, but I can't see any.'"

A Cheaper Way.

"My dear sir, nothing but an operation will save your life."

"What will it cost?"

"About $500."

"But I have only $150."

"In that case let's try what these pills will do."

Something Religious.

Two shipwrecked sailors were on a desert island. They were utterly miserable, pinched with hunger and cold. The one more wretched than the other said to his companion, "Can you pray Bill?"

"No."

"Can you sing a hymn?"

"No."

"Well," said the first, "let's have something religious; let's have a collection."

Fine Treatment.

"Since you've been calling on Miss Bute, how have her father and mother treated you?"

"Fine! I haven't even met them."

Just Chasing It.

Disheveled and weary, the stout suburbanite sank gasping on a seat in the railway station, and glared at the rear end of the train he had just missed. To him came the fussy station master.

"Were you trying to catch that train sir?" he asked, pompously.

The panting would-be passenger eyed him balefully for a second before he hissed a reply:

"Oh, no! I merely wished to chase it out of the station!"

Reason For His Delay.

A sailor stood in front of his commander, a gentleman fierce of mien, and with some nasty questions on the tip of his tongue.

"Brown," came the stern demand, "what have you to say?"

"Sir," and the pat answer tripped lightly, "yesterday afternoon I set out to come aboard. Arriving at the railway station, I found I had only a minute to spare."

"Yes," rapped out the commander. "Just then a band stuck up 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and I stood at attention and saluted until they had finished."

"Yes."

"Then, sir, by that time the train had gone!"

From the Country.

The old man from the country stopped in front of a picture palace plastered with posters of lions, tigers, elephants and other African wild animals.

"Great guns, Henry!" he said to his nephew, who lived in town. "I'm glad I'm going home on Saturday afternoon."

"Why are you so anxious to get away?" asked the nephew.

Pointing to the notice, the old chap read aloud the words—"To be released on Saturday night."

Topics of Interest.

Port Washington (N. Y.) News: "Mr. Wilson tells his fellow countrymen that they must abandon their old ideas of national isolation, and take hold with the rest of Europe to settle the world's turmoil. But his attitude toward Europe is very dictatorial, and insistent that his own personal solutions of existing problems be submissively accepted. This is no way to help. America was very popular in Europe when he first went over, and now America is very unpopular over there. Evidently there is no reason to hope that the United States can do anything to quiet the world turmoil, until there is normal minded intelligence in the White House."

Philadelphia Press: "Employers and workers alike can give thoughtful study to the estimate of the State Commissioner of Labor and Industry that 484 strikes in Pennsylvania last year involved a loss of $14,000,000. The staggering proportions of this loss are all the more appalling in view of the fact that it was both purposeless and preventable. The workers bore the brunt of it. More than 17,000 of them were forced out of employment and deprived of their wages for varying lengths of time. The employers lost in curtailed business. And the public lost, as the public must always lose, when production is lessened and prices forced upward. The moral is clear that strikes do not pay. They pay the striking workman least of all. They are an industrial waste which should be checked in the interest of the public, employer and employed. It only requires a wider and more forcible impetus to the movement already current toward abolishing strikes and substituting more equitable and less wasteful methods of settling industrial controversies."

Baltimore Sun: "The United States Shipping Board has been letting out a howl in Washington because of its inability to get bids on more than 1,500,000 barrels out of 24,000,000 barrels of fuel oil needed for the year beginning April 1 next. Oil trade men say the government is largely to blame for not taking a stronger stand with regard to Mexico's recent interference with American oil-drilling operations in that country. It was pointed out that had American companies not been stopped in their drilling a few months ago new production would have been available in sufficient volume to meet the current market demands for fuel oil. Temporary permits were given the American companies a month ago to drill new wells. It will require several months, it is stated, to get new production on to the market. Meanwhile fuel oil prices have risen in striking fashion."

Dr. Melancthon Woolsey Stryker, formerly president of Hamilton college, assailed the league of nations in an address at the National Republican Club, New York City, stating he did not believe the time had come for America to amalgamate herself with all the other nations of the world. "No four or five nations have a mandate to boss the world," said Dr. Stryker. "There is no more reason why England, France, Italy, Japan and the United States should have a right to boss the world than Switzerland, Chile, Argentina or any other group. There are a whole lot more Americans in America today than there were two years ago, and what America needs is to clean house not to let somebody else try to tell her how to do it. The American does not believe in permitting somebody else to think for him."

Maj. Gen. Wood declares that "the golden rule of honesty and fair play is the basis on which peace between those who labor and those who direct labor will always be made." He says: "Labor is not a chattel or a commodity. It has no special rights or privileges. Likewise, we must stand for the rights of property—the rights of the individual—and we must impress upon all people that the only way to work contentedly, you must give a reasonable and decent wage. The danger in this country is not the alien Red. He is simply a nuisance. The danger is our own indifference. You will find American labor is 98 per cent straight. We are through with the war and we have some problems. They are not very serious. They will not be serious at all if we all get together and go at them with the energy with which we went to war. In the first place, we want to drive ahead our business and our commerce: not only the business at home but the world-wide business. We want to take advantage of the 15,000,000 tons of deadweight shipping we have and put it under the American flag. We also need behind us our navy for the purpose of training sea men in time of peace so as to be prepared for war. We want to build up closer relations with Central and South America. We are all anxious to see action upon the league of nations, and I think the general sentiment of the people by and large is for adoption of the league with reservations which absolutely Americanize it."

A Private Still.

A zealous revenue officer was going up into Kentucky district to try to locate several "moonshine" stills which were known to exist.

Meeting a native the officer said: "I'll give you $50 if you can take me to a private still."

"Sure I will," was the reply, as he pocketed the money. "Come with me."

For many weary miles over the mountain roads they tramped, until they came into view of army camps. Pointing to a soldier seated on a step inside the square, the native said: "There you are sir, my brother Fred, he's been a soldier for ten years an' he's a private still."
