THE CASE OF SENATOR NEWBERRY.

An Editorial from the Fort Wayne (Ind.) News.

It is inferred that no one will challenge the technical correctness of the verdict under which Senator Newberry and his associates were found guilty. The defendants themselves freely acknowledged their "guilt," providing the construction of the law by Judge Sessions was correct, and, according to the jurors, a conviction would have been impossible except for the free and voluntary evidence of these men. It was not charged that their use of money was for the purpose of buying votes or corrupting the electorate in other ways, and while they unquestionably used money "illegally" they used it for perfectly legal purposes—advertising and organizing work. Under the drastic instructions of the court, there was, perhaps, no other course for the jurors to follow.

The travesty of the whole thing, however, and its manifest injustice, are shown not alone in the grotesque absurdity of the law but in the fact that prosecution was confined to the adherents of one candidate. To say that the friends and adherents of Henry Ford spent no more than the legal $3,750 in his behalf is to present a statement that makes people laugh. They spent money like water and it is estimated that the cost to William R. Hearst alone was considerable more than $1,000,000. Indeed, it was the aggressive publicity campaign of the Ford people, with their vicious appeals to disloyalties during the absence from the state of the soldiers, that caused the friends of Commander Newberry to resort to the use of a money campaign themselves.

The prosecution of Senator Newberry was pushed and promoted by Woodrow Wilson, who, miffed by the defeat of his friend and supporter, Henry Ford, did not scruple to employ the federal agencies and nearly one million dollars of public money to conduct a thoroughly partisan prosecution. Yet he himself in 1916 had been the direct beneficiary of the very offense charged against Senator Newberry, and at the hands of this same Henry Ford who contributed $150,000 during the campaign to put in the newspapers of the country those well remembered advertisements which lampooned Col. Roosevelt as "a war dog" and which thanked God for Wilson who with honor had kept us out of war.

Naturally the validity of the law restricting expenditures for publicity to an absurdly normal sum will be attacked and it is confidently believed that it will be upset. Commander Newberry himself spent nothing and things have certainly come to a sorry pass in this country if a man's friends may not contribute and contribute liberally for the perfectly proper furtherance of his candidacy.

The thing which really rankles in the breast of every decent American, however, is the character of the contest in which Truman H. Newberry and Henry Ford appeared as contestants. Truman H. Newberry was a man whose good citizenship and patriotism were above question and above reproach. In 1898, although wealthy and in a profitable business, he relinquished all to become a common seaman on a warship in the Spanish-American struggle. He rose by his own efforts, attracted the attention of Colonel Roosevelt by his gallantry, and was later made assistant secretary of the Navy by his fine judgment of men. When the world war began, although far beyond draft age, he and his two boys at once enlisted for active service. He himself was assigned to naval duties and the two sons went to France with the army where they engaged in actual combat. Neither Commander Newberry nor his two sons were in Michigan when the election occurred. They were engaged at the front.

Opposed to Commander Newberry was Henry Ford, professional pacifist war supply contractor, and father of Edsel, the slacker. Ford was content to remain at home piling up huge profits from the contracts thrown his way by the federal administration and employing his means and his influence with official Washington to keep his son Edsel out of the military service. Just what pull was resorted to in order to effect this shameful, disgraceful and damnable exemption is not known, and may never be known, but there was a general hoot of scorn and derision from the country when it was announced that the young slacker was exempted on the ground that he was "essential to the operation of the Ford industries which were engaged in getting out war work."

The election in Michigan in 1918 was one which stirred that state as it has rarely been stirred before. A great portion of the supporters of Senator Newberry were where he and his sons were—out of the country and unable to vote. Thousands and thousands of brave soldiers who would not only have gone to the limit to express their disapproval of the Fords and their conduct, could not participate in the battle to save their state from the black disgrace of representation by a man whose colossal ignorance was approximated only by his bigotry, egotism and lack of Americanism—by men who denounced the flag of his country as a rag and who declared openly for internationalism.

Arrayed in Ford's behalf were all the pacifists, "conscientious objectors," bolsheviks, socialists and anarchists. All of the men who hated this country and who favored foreign governments or no government at all were working for him tooth and toe nail. Every I, W. W. and every red in Michigan were out for him and so were all the cranks, dreamers and mushy idealists. And so, alas, were many partisan democrats. And these people, backed by an immense campaign fund and an unscrupulous and irresponsible press, were turning heaven and earth to put Ford over. It was a time when the patriotic people of Michigan, deprived as they were of the soldier vote, were obliged to fight. No doubt they did as their opponents did and went outside the silly and neuritic statute, but at that they fought a good fight and kept the faith. They have made no secret of it and they are proud that they saved their commonwealth from the ignominy that would have been its position had Ford been chosen.

"Sold!"
As the man and the maid strolled through the picture gallery the woman stopped before one exhibit. "Oh, how sweet!" she breathed. "I wonder what it means?" questioned the young fellow, as he eyed the pictured pair who clung together in an attitude of love and longing. "Oh, Charlie, don't you see?" the girl chided tenderly. "He has just asked her to marry him and she has consented. It's lovely! What does the artist call the picture?" the young man leaned nearer and eyed the little label on the frame. "I see!" he cried. "It's printed on this card here 'Sold!'"

Musical Effects.
"You have advanced your prices enormously," complained the cafe proprietor.
"Only enough to meet overhead charges," answered the orchestra leader. "We have a new jazz number in which we kick a hole into the bass viol at every performance."

Danger of Wilting.
Teddy hated to wash his face more than once a day. Just as vehemently he liked to use the hose to sprinkle the flowers. Father had to demonstrate with him for oversprinkling his flowers. "You'll make them wilt if you sprinkle them at any time except in the morning," he told him. A few days later his mother was trying to persuade him to wash his face for lunch. Then grandmother tried to use her influence. "Why, I always wash my face before lunch," she told him. Then Teddy looked at grandma's wrinkles and remembered the flowers. "Yes and just see how wilted it is," he retorted.

Concluding the Ceremony.
The Justice of the Peace—Do you take this woman to be your lawful wedded wife?
The Bridegroom—I do.
The Justice—Then I pronounce you man and wife. And remember you asked me to do this. Don't ever blame me.

Completely Tired Out.
The colonel's negro orderly was missing, and inquiry developed that he was confined to quarters as the result of a fight. Solicitous as to the welfare of his striker, the Old Man visited him personally in his barracks, where he found him in a dilapidated condition. "How's this Sam?" he inquired. "What's been happening to you?" "Well, sah you know Sat-day was pay-day, and after supper we gets into a big crap game. Long came 'bout 2 o'clock in the A. M. me and Napoleon Sims gets into a little friendly argument. Cunnel, before I knew it he hits me in de mouf and he knocks out fo' teef, and he hits me in de eyes and blacks dem, and he blame near busts mah nose and mah jaw. Den he gets me down on de ground and stomps on me and cracks three ribs. Fo' God, Cunnel, Ah never got so tiahd of a man in all mah life."

Breaking Even.
"I bunkered one of them smart confidence men up in Kay See good and proper!" boasted Gabe Gosnell, of Grudge, who was just back from the Big Burg. "Bought the Union Station from him, by cracky!"
"Thunder!" ejaculated the acquaintance to whom the incident was being related. "What's the matter with you? You didn't bunker him; he bunkered you!"
"Not by a lightin' sight he didn't! I gave him that 'ere oil stock I got stuck with last year for it."

Pleasant Conversation.
The spinster waiter two or three hours to be admitted to the presence of the man who visited their town once a month to retail good advice and his own proprietary medicine to the come-ons. At last she was admitted. "Yes, yes," said the brusque doctor. "I want to know if influenza can be transmitted by kissing?" "Beyond a doubt, madam." "Well, a man with a pronounced case of influenza kissed me." "So! How long ago was this?" "Well, let's see. I think it was about two months." "Why madam. No harm can come to you now from the exposure. It is quite too late." "I know it, she sighed. "but I just love to talk about it."

It is certainly quite flattering to those sterling Democratic statesmen, Edwards, McAdoo, Bryan and Palmer to get beaten in the Michigan Democratic primary for the presidential endorsement by Herbert Hoover, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination. It's getting so a Democrat can't even carry a Democratic primary.

Paderewski is particularly an exile from Poland whose freedom was achieved mostly through his efforts. He may have discovered that politics after all, was not his forte, but as a premier he should have been able to beat even Mr. Wilson in issuing "firm notes."

Puccini and Mascagni, the famous composers, will be members of the next Italian Senate. From which it must be assumed that Italy is preparing to play a leading role in the concert of nations.
