What the Editors Say

President Wilson used to talk about "peace without victory", but what we seem to have now is victory without peace.

Mr. Glenn E. Plumb has invested $25,000 in a palatial home in Chevy Chase, a fashionable suburb of Washington. Apparently Mr. Plumb's advocacy of economic facilities keeps his pockets were filled, which may convince him that their adoption would do the same for everybody else.—News-Review.

The New York World says the Republicans have attempted to turn the political clock back to 1909. Recalling what has been done to them in the past seven years the people really wish that could be done; as it is, it is up to the Republican party to wind up and set going the clock that has been stopped by the bungling of the present national administration.

"I am as confident today," says President Wilson, "as I was when I returned from Paris finally in July," that the people of the country are for the Americanized covenant of the league of nations he brought home with him. And Mr. Wilson is probably as confident today as when he wrote his famous campaign letter of 1913 that the people of the country are awaiting an opportunity to give his administration a vote of confidence.

The Oregon Voter—We always looked to it for good reading and sometimes good logic. But the best of them make mistakes. Here comes the Oregon Voter acknowledging its unfitness to vote for U. S. Senator. The editor is a Republican, called for a Republican ballot and voted for Robt. Stanfield at the primaries, and now talks favorably for the democratic candidate. The very thing it has before warned against. It also acknowledges that a vote for the democratic candidate would be against its convictions, and yet ponders and hesitates. Poor befuddled Voter. Pity!—Banks Herald.

Federal officers are raiding fake oil stock dealers in response to a flood of letters from persons who have lost their savings, but while the raids may result in landing smooth gentlemen behind the bars it won't bring back the easy money they secured. If it wasn't ancient history, the strangest thing about it is the ease with which the game is worked for about all that appears necessary is ability to write a convincing argument, enough money or credit for printing and a golden stream commences to flow to the faker as soon as his literature has reached those on his sucker list. And this, too, in spite of the fact that dumping government bonds on the market has caused unheard-of low prices, the conclusion being that holders are selling a security with the United States government behind it and investing the money in oil stocks that some one they never heard of before, and who may be thousands of miles away, says will make them rich. It does—in experience—but they will gorge it and bite again when they have saved up another stake.—Independent.

"Me-And-God" Comment.

"The process by which the Chicago platform was accomplished seemed to me to have been essentially Prussian in inspiration and method," writes President Wilson. The Chicago platform followed pretty closely the lines suggested by conferees representing every element and interest in the Republican party. President Wilson's idea of democratic preparation of a platform is to have it written by himself in the White House, as the Democratic national platform of 1916 was, fill it full of high-sounding eulogiums of himself for keeping us out of war and other achievements, and then having a servile party convention swallow it whole, just as Mr. Wilson tried to make the United States Senate shake down the un-Americanized covenant of the league of nations.

THE COX DIVORCE MUDDLE

William Jennings Bryan says the Cox candidacy is an insult to 15,000,000 women voters. Still, if Cox should be nominated, we expect to see Wilyum leading the Democratic hosts in adding injury to the insult.

As for us, the Cox divorce matter doesn't interest us from a political standpoint. After the women stood for Wilson we have no doubt they can stomach Cox. Also, the Coxes and "us" happen to have very near mutual friends. According to these friends the interesting thing about the Cox matrimonial tangle is not his divorce but the way Mr. Cox and the first Mrs. Cox live since the divorce. She has the children and when anything happens to them she goes to the phone and consult him about it. Or, she did until recently when Mrs. Cox moved to New York. "Little Jimmy had the measles, Jim. Do you think we had better send him to the hospital or have a nurse?" Nearly every day, "they say" one of the separated pair rings the other up the both have since remarried. A divorce, evidently, is a mere incident in their young lives.

A peculiar thing about the Cox-Harding tangle would be, too, that the former Mrs. Cox is a relative of Harding. Since the Chicago convention "our mutual friends" tell us that Mrs. Cox has stated that if "Jim" is nominated by the Democrats that she will fight for Harding. She will vote for him anyway, but if her former husband is nominated, she will get out and fight for him. Evidently blood is thicker than ex-husbands.—Gazette-Times.
