What the Editors Say

With all due respect of his present good intent, the Tillamook "sanctified" soul who has just sent $2.00 to Secretary of State Sam Koser as a conscience atonement for having rather accidentally sneaked into the state fair grounds without paying...

American employers who have become accustomed to criticizing their workmen for slowness and inefficiency may find consolation in considering Germany. The German workman, formerly so docile and industrious as any in the world, has "laid down" before the war he worked ten hours a day. During the war he worked longer. Now he works nominally eight hours a day...

The gas shortage question is causing motor owners to turn grey haired over night and what was a passing fever of autoist unrest, threatens to become a permanent St. Vitus dance for the average car owner. At present the recent difficulties are over, at least for the time being, but the why of the past and the wherefore of the future may be gleaned from a few figures recently disclosed by the American Petroleum Institute.

A Real Bargain for Governor Cox Governor Cox is speaking in the spirit of the erstwhile Ohio Democratic leader who, explaining an election result, said: "I bought us."

Platforms as Fly-Catchers (By William Hooper) Students of polite literature are awaiting the appearance of the Democratic campaign book for a complete collection of war epigrams of Woodrow Wilson. Those to which we shall refer here, therefore, are subject to revision on the appearance of the volume.

Can This Be True? Detailed statistics on the tremendous increase of the cost of living from December, 1914, to June, 1920, showing increases of from 110 to 136 per cent in every article of necessity, have been received here from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor in Washington.

Dreaming, Dreaming. From Cox headquarters at Columbus, Ohio, comes the following: "Tom Taggart made the public prediction at South Bend and Indian's electoral vote would be found this fall in the Democratic chairman."

Some of the more thoughtful Democrats are beginning to wish that their candidate had stayed not merely on the porch, but under the porch.

but it does indicate a change for the better in the life of the nation.

Prices are going to begin to strike a more conservative level due to the fact that efficiency in production is going to increase says an optimist.

We have had a period of high wages, short hours and decreased production which has doubled up prices on the consumer.

We are now going to have a period of good wages, fair hours and increased production which will give the consumer value received for his money.

Workmen will find they must do an efficient day's work for a day's pay or another man will be put in their place, the manufacturer will find that he will have to furnish a good product for the price charged or his goods will not sell.

In other words the day of demanding the highest wage or price for inefficient labor or manufactured goods—the day when anything went and the consumer paid the bill—is about over. The hand-writing is clear upon the wall for those who will read.—Gazette Times.

This is Some Hypocrisy Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic candidate for Vice President, says that the United States has in its vest pocket several votes in the league of nations assembly through the control of other governments in this hemisphere.

And one of the fourteen points is "self-determination of people!" Could political hypocrisy go further than to pretend, on the one hand, that it stands for the liberation of peoples and on the other that through military force it controls, and expects to control under the emancipating league of nations, the representation of coerced little "republics" in the deliberations of that league?

A Real Bargain for Governor Cox

Governor Cox is speaking in the spirit of the erstwhile Ohio Democratic leader who, explaining an election result, said: "I bought us." Governor Cox refers to "fabulous contributions," amounting to "fifteen million dollars," to the Republican campaign fund. His running mate calls it "thirty million."

Platforms as Fly-Catchers

(By William Hooper) Students of polite literature are awaiting the appearance of the Democratic campaign book for a complete collection of war epigrams of Woodrow Wilson. Those to which we shall refer here, therefore, are subject to revision on the appearance of the volume.

There is one which ran: "Peace without Victory." In the immutable working out of events, its purport got somewhat twisted so that we now have, instead of "Peace without Victory," "Victory without Peace."

Then there was "self-determination," from which, in the shuffle of events at Paris, Ireland, Egypt, India, Shantung and Korea were left out altogether. Another group became mandatories, a mandatory being a state which has secured "self" determination through the determination of somebody else.

Aso, "Freedom of the seas." The humor of this appealed even to Mr. Wilson, who remarked: "That is a joke on me," the league of nations, you understand, being a joke on the people of the United States.

There are a lot more, which escape us just now, but one stands out clearly from away back in those days when Woodrow was first beginning his reign.

"Political platforms," said Mr. Wilson, "are molasses to catch flies with."

We, fellow citizens, were the flies. And how we got beautifully caught Wilson and Cox have now spread another mess of molasses. Are we going to be caught again?

Some of the more thoughtful Democrats are beginning to wish that their candidate had stayed not merely on the porch, but under the porch.

Sweep and Weep or Clean and Smile

We'll guarantee that no woman likes to work in a dust storm. It used to almost make us weep.

So we don't do it now. We don't weep at all. We clean and enjoy fresh air while doing it.

Sweeping—broom sweeping—spoiled our curtains and made endless work for duster.

Cleaning—Electric Vacuum Cleaning—is done in no time and satisfactorily. No dust from a sweeping storm left on the furniture. No double work.

For less than $2.50 a year for electricity we do our cleaning. The cost and the results make us smile.
