

WAS TOO FERVENT

Law Saw More Love Than Religion in Man's Kiss.

Exhaustive Legal Opinion by British Judge Laid Down Fine Distinction Between the Salute Amatory and the Salute Religious.

The Islanders of Lewis, the island in the western Hebrides, off the coast of Scotland, which is coming so much into prominence since its recent purchase by the soap king, Lord Leverhulme, have many quaint customs, one of which was strikingly revealed in an action for divorce tried in court at Edinburgh. The story is well told in the judgment pronounced by Lord Sands.

The action was at the instance of Alexander Matheson, fisherman of Portogaran, Stornaway, against Mrs. Isabella McLean or Matheson, 6 Portogaran, and against William Campbell, merchant, 9 Portogaran, co-defender. His lordship granted a decree of divorce and found the co-defender liable in expenses and £40 damages.

His lordship said he thought it was proved that, considering their previously distant relations, there was a remarkable intimacy between defendant and co-defender. The co-defender kissed the defendant both when they were alone and in her house before her children. This in itself would have been conclusive had it not been for one circumstance. The defendant and the co-defender were both members of the United Free church. There was evidence that could not be disregarded that there was a certain practice of kissing between communicants, though, in deference probably to British ideas, the salutation seemed to pass only between persons of opposite sexes. The existence of such a practice seemed somewhat startling, but his lordship thought it was explained by the evidence taken in relation to what was a matter of public knowledge among those conversant with religious conditions in the highlands.

It had been the practice for only a mere handful of the adherents of the church to participate in communion, although the communion season was a far more solemn action in the highlands than in the lowlands.

Since the split in the Free church, however, in 1800, the sections which adhered to the United Free church had tended to become much more like their brethren in the south, and thus it manifested itself among other ways in many younger persons becoming communicants. This caused an awkward complication as regarded the kissing custom. It might be all very well for elderly saints to greet one another with a chaste oriental salute, but it was a different matter when it came to young married women being promiscuously kissed by casual male acquaintances who happened to be fellow communicants. This extension of the custom was therefore disapproved of by many, but to a certain extent the custom prevailed. Such being the state of matters, the kissing indulged in by the parties to this case had not the conclusive character of undue familiarity.

It was proved that the co-defender did more than kiss the defendant; he also put his arms around her, a fact which he admitted. His lordship felt that religious custom did not justify this extension of the embrace.

Egyptian Women Are Serfs.
The treatment of women in Egypt is the darkest phase of Egyptian life, says G. N. Barnes, British member of parliament, who recently returned from a tour of that country.

The men in Egypt, says Mr. Barnes, so far as sex relations are concerned, think themselves the lords of creation. They can divorce their wives at will, without whim or reason, and it is not uncommon for a man to have three wives.

"In many houses," continues Mr. Barnes, "I never saw a woman, and you can take it from me that the position of the women in Egypt is absolutely one of serfdom and dependence. They spend their lives in miserable hovels, in working in the adjoining fields or in getting water."

"They are the serfs of the men and as much beasts of burden as the donkey and the camel. A people which uses women folk in that way are destined to be a subject race and do not deserve to govern."

Honors Remained With Mule.
While a circus parade was in progress at Kane, Pa., one of the elephants, thinking possibly to relieve the monotony of the occasion, gave its trunk a toss in the air and brought it down with a resounding smack on a mule that had been standing at the curb quietly watching the sights. In spite of the handicap of being hitched to a delivery wagon, the mule promptly wheeled about, took quick aim, and delivered two kicks with lightning swiftness. The kicks caught the elephant squarely on the knees. It stopped for an instant, but if it even momentarily contemplated further interchanges with the mule, it gave up the idea, and finished the parade with a decided limp.—Philadelphia Record.

KOH-I-NOR'S STORY ENDLESS

Complete Tale of Matchless Diamond, Now One of British Crown Jewels, Was Never Told.

All the world has heard of the Koh-i-nor, or, as it has been sometimes called, the Great Mogul diamond, and it would seem that there was nothing more to be said about it, remarks Eleanor Meddock in Asia Magazine. Yet, in point of fact, not a tenth part of its history has ever been traced, so far does it extend back into the vistas of the past.

Perhaps one of the strangest things about it is that it cannot be lost to the world indefinitely. It was bricked and plastered up in a wall and miraculously found after its former owner had been murdered. It was twice thrown away as a bit of glass and once went to the washerwoman in the pocket of an Englishman's drill suit.

This matchless gem is called in India the "Mountain of Light" and the "Talisman of Kings;" the latter because it was said to bring sovereignty to its possessor. Strangely enough, after it fell into the hands of a Turkish slave of illegitimate origin, a line known as the "Slave Kings" sat on the throne of Delhi for eighty years, during which period the desire to possess the talisman amounted to a frenzied obsession. Suddenly it disappeared in the chaos that brought the slave dynasty to an end in 1200.

The Koh-i-nor later resurfaced without bloodshed through the reign of Shah Jahan down to his son Aurangzeb, who exhibited it to a number of Europeans whom he was entertaining at his court. Among them was Tavernier, the French jeweler, who later wrote a descriptive account of it for the delectation of Europe. After being tossed like a shuttlecock in the Delhi loot, and remaining for a period of years with the Sikhs in the Punjab, this most celebrated diamond in the world now rests on a purple velvet cushion among Britain's crown jewels in the grim old Tower of London.

How Wit Helps Legislation.
It is sometimes said that a reputation for wit is fatal to a serious legislative career. But the statement is not altogether true, for more than once a bit of wit has prevented legislative folly.

It is a tradition in Philadelphia that during the constitutional convention it was proposed to incorporate in the Constitution a provision that the United States army should never exceed 3,000 men. According to the tradition the debate, which was possibly informal and outside the regular sitting, was abruptly cut short when Benjamin Franklin solemnly suggested that there be incorporated another clause making it part of the organic law of the land that no foreign nation should ever invade the country with an army of more than 3,000.

A somewhat similar point was scored in the state legislature a few years ago when, during a discussion not over well based, it was proposed by a shrewd Yankee from the hills of Sunderland, F. L. Whitmore, that a law should be enacted providing that no one should be obliged to work between meals.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Tasmania Has Rare Mineral.
Tasmanian men promise to become the world's chief producer for some time to come of the rare mineral osmiridium. The various osmiridium yielding centers of this extensive serpentine belt on the west coast are already giving profitable employment to 200 men, and it is an easy matter for an industrious digger to earn up to £10 a week, while many are making double that and more. A complete bulletin on this highly interesting mineral occurrence is in course of preparation, and its publication, it is expected, will attract the attention of the whole mining world to Tasmania. Last year 1670 ounces of osmiridium was produced in Tasmania, the value being £24 per ounce.

Machine Needed.
Cotton picking became much cheaper if some ingenious inventor would devise a mechanical means for picking it—the work of picking being the costly item, in time and labor.

There are cotton-picking machines on the market, but none of them is very satisfactory. One of them operates on the principle of a vacuum cleaner, sucking the bolls off the plants through rubber tubes. Another utilizes steel bristles for entangling the bolls.

When a really practical contrivance for the purpose is obtainable, an average farm family in the South will be able to produce forty bales of cotton in a season, instead of seven bales.—New York Times.

Kill a Million Prairie Dogs.
Complete extermination of what was considered one of the largest prairie dog "towns" in the West has been reported to the predatory animal inspector's office at Phoenix, Ariz., by the Chiricahua Cattle company of Cochise county, southeastern Arizona.

More than 1,000,000 prairie dogs were estimated to have lived on the company's ranch of more than 30,000 acres until the management started an offensive campaign against them. Now their vast honeycombs of underground burrows are utterly deserted, the company reported.

ELDERLY CAN "COME BACK"

Physician Tells How He Succeeded in Throwing Off the Inebriety of Advancing Years.

Dr. L. Leo Nascher tells how he made himself over into a young man, in an article in People's Magazine for May. "It is something any elderly person can do," he says. "Here is the simple proposition. A man ages many years in the course of a severe illness lasting several weeks. After a few weeks' vacation he looks and feels many, but to a certain extent the cure he was taken ill. Having in mind hundreds of cases in which this has proved true, it is logical to ask if we cannot rejuvenate the aged, make them grow young again, just as we made the prematurely aged invalid become young. And, through recent experiments, that can now be answered in the affirmative. I speak from personal experience."

"It is a fact that there is not a single one of the objective manifestations of senility, those that give the appearance of old age, which cannot be removed, suppressed, or hidden, or at least a youthful substitute found for it."

"To restore the spirit and buoyancy of youth is more difficult. This requires the will, not only the desire, but the determination and the energy to be young, to feel young and look young. Most old persons have the desire, some have the determination, but few have the energy to carry out the measures necessary for rejuvenation. In many cases the old man or woman who would like to do so is afraid of ridicule, of being called giddy and foolish if he or she suddenly appeared in youthful attire and adorned with the artifices of the beauty parlor. Yet under some special stimulus, usually the desire to attract some particular individual of the opposite sex, both men and women have gone beyond the limit of propriety to look younger than they are and feel younger than they look. And if they went about it the right way they usually succeeded."

"I tried it a couple of years ago, not to attract any particular individual, but to see if it could be done, and how it felt to grow young."

"In one year the change in my appearance and actions and feelings was so complete that persons who had not seen me since the earlier days, when I was aged, did not recognize me."

Yields to March of Progress.
One of the oldest banks in Wall street has finally yielded to the march of progress—and installed a telephone. It will only have one phone at first, for it is difficult to get the proprietor of many years. They have never had a telephone because they believed that confidential business could not be conducted over a telephone and their atmosphere of the old bank, the oldest in the city, is that of a staid institution in some old town settled in Colonial times. Absolute quiet prevails. The employees retain the old-fashioned good manners. Instead of a lovely laughing creature who tells the world the line is busy in thrilling soprano, the bank will select for their first telephone operator a person with a beard and a bass voice, able to endow his lightest utterances with a certain profundity.

New and Valuable Resin.
A new synthetic resin is stated to be a suitable substitute for many purposes for Damar and Kauri gums and common resin. It is produced from coal tar distillates, and has been named Cumar. It is soluble in coal tar solvents, vegetable oils, carbon bisulphide, carbon tetrachloride, ether and acetone. It is insoluble in alcohol, and this unusual property gives it a special value for varnishes. It finds use also in leather dressings, polishes, artificial leather, printing inks, waterproofing paper, linoleum, and as a binder for molded materials. Its color may vary from light yellow to dark amber, and the melting points of the various grades range from 50 degrees to about 160 degrees centigrade. With many mineral and vegetable waxes it gives mixtures of remarkable properties.

A New Outfit.
The man next door to four-year-old Allen has a new car and little Allen is much given to accompanying him to the garage to keep him company while he tinkers with it. He sometimes seems to get as much pleasure out of it as does its actual owner.

Only the other day something happened which threatened for a time to dim his enjoyment. The owner of the car came home with a jumper suit in which he appeared the next time he went out to work on his car.

The next time he started out to the garage he whistled for Allen but no boy came. Then he went over to Allen's house and hunted up the little fellow. "Come on out to the garage with me, son," he said.

Allen looked at him sorrowfully. "I can't," he said sadly. "I haven't any garage underwear like yours."

Chinese Girls Fight the Boys.
According to the Pekin Jingo the experiment of mixed education has not been a brilliant success in the capital as it resulted in a stand up fight between girl and boy students in the government university. It appears that during school hours some of the boys attempted to "cut out" the swains of some of the girls, and these, becoming jealous, tried to wreak vengeance. The government has dismissed all the participants in the scrap and has decided that the present moment is inopportune for mixed education and will drop the scheme.
