William Hazlett Tells of Times When He Wants to Be Left Alone With His Thoughts.

Give me the dear blue sky over my head, and the green turf beneath my feet, a winding road before me, and a three hours' march to dinner-and then some game on these lone heaths. I laugh, I run, I leap, I sing for joy. From the point of yonder rolling cloud to his native village shore. Then long enberg recovered from a two weeks dull commonplaces, mine is that undisturbed silence of the heart which alone is perfect eloquence. No one likes puns, alliterations, antithesis, argument and analysis better than I do; but I sometimes had rather be without them. "Leave, oh, leave me to my repose!" I have just now other business in hand which would seem idle to you, but is with me "very stuff o' the conscience." Is not this wild the publishers, we have received a rose sweet without a comment? Does not this daisy leap to my heart set in its coat of emerald? Yet if I were to explain to you the circumstance that has so endeared it to me, you would only smile. Had I not better then keep it to myself and let it serve me to broad over, from here to yonder ernggy point, and from thence onward to the far distant horizon? I should be but bad company all that way, and therefore, prefer being alone. I have heard it said that you may, when the moody fit comes on, walk or ride on by yourself and indulge your reverles. But this looks like a breach of manners, a neglect of others, and you are thinking all the time that you ought to rejoin your party. "Out upon such half-faced fellowship," say I. I like to be either entirely to myself or en tirely at the disposal of others; to talk or be silent, to walk or sit, to be sociable or solitary.-Table Talk by William Hazlett.

FRENCH USE ENGLISH WORD

Academy Which Keeps Language Correct Decides to Admit "Gentleman" to the Dictionary.

The French academy, which devotes long sittings to the task of keeping the French language absolutely correct, and which regards all foreign words introduced into the language with horror, has just made an exception in favor of an English word, which is henceforward to have a place in the official dictionary of France. says the London Telegraph. This is the word "gentleman," which is very conversation rather than the timehonored gentilhomme, which ordinarily means pobleman, but which, in the new edition of the dictionary, is to be described as meaning "a man who without being noble by race, has lofty sentiments, elegant manners, and does oble acts." With regard to the word the dictionary as "an English word sometimes employed in French in the metaphorical and moral sense of the word gentilhomme." This is undoubtedly not the last time the French academy will be called upon to give an official welcome to an English word which has become current in the French language: for example, the word "home" is becoming a great favorite, and the misuse of the words "smoking" and "dancing" for "smoking jacket" and "dance hall" has become so usual that the English origin of the words is quite forgotten.

The Alley Dog.

An alley dog they called him. a tramp and worse things still. Stones they flung at him, On their porches in the evening they abused him and plotted against his life. And all because he was ownerless and unkempt in his tawny shagginess. But, with all their stone throwing and brandishing of sticks, he ambled good-naturedly along and sought the company of the children, who knew not his reputation among righteous citizens and loved him in spite of his dirty coat. He played with them until unappreciative grownups chased him away.

And then one day his whole life changed. With a group of his child mates he went to the nearby river. He watched them prepare for a swim. Suddenly he noticed that one was struggling hard. He leaped into the river. What happened after that he no longer knows. He knows only that the little boy was saved and that he is now a respected member of the little boy's family.

No longer is he called an alley dog. No more do trate men plot his death. F. Johnson; County Sup't., Mrs. He used to wonder why. Now he has cool, moist nose on contemplative paws-content at last at having come into his own.-Milwankee Journal.

> Vanishing Indian Language. Nowhere in America has there been such a diversity of indian languages as in California. But these languages are now rapidly disappearing. Several of them are known only by five or persons, and hardly a year passes without some dialect, or even language, ceasing to exist, through the death of the last individual able to speak it. Efforts are being made to record all these languages for the sake of the light they throw on the ancient history of the Pacific coast.-Sun and New York Herald.

RIVERS TURNED INTO SEWERS

Streams That Once Were Famous Lon. don Thoroughfares Now Are Far Under the Ground.

The river Tyburn, which, along with the Thames, helped to make Westminster, in London, an island in Saxon times, can still be traced from the Marble arch neighborhood to Westminster. It originally flowed through Hyde park and St. James' park at a time when these were marshlands. Several feet below the pavement in Great College street are the remains of a bridge which spanned the Tyburn at this spot fust before it entered the Thames.

But the most famous of all the burted rivers of London is undoubtedly the Fleet. It flowed through Jack Ketch's warren, where dwelt at times such notorious characters as Dick Turpin and Jack Sheppard. It was a favorite dodge of the highwaymen and other thieves who infested the district of Saffron hill and Hatton garden to drop through a trapdoor to the Stygian banks of the Fleet, pull a plank after them and so escape capture by the Bow street runners. The Fleet ditch ran into the Thames at Blackfriars, and small craft used to put into it with merchandise.

In the middle of the city was the Wellbrooke, and on the east side the Langbourne, and in the western suburbs the pleasant stream of the Oldbourne, also deep enough to accommodate good-sized craft. Other London rivers not yet wholly sewers are the Roding, the Lea, the Ravensbourne and the Wandle, but the Brixton is no longer visible anywhere.

HER IDEA OF LUXURIES Middle-Aged Negress Tells Mistress How She Will Spend $600 Insurance Left by Her Husband.

A middle-aged negro woman of Richmond was left some $600 insurance by her husband, and shortly afterward, when asked by the lady for whom she had cooked for many years what she intended to do with her money, declared that she meant to spend it on luxuries.

"Yo' see, Miss Mary, Ah done wuck hard all mah life, an' ain't had nuffin' but des needcessities, an' Ah's gwine blow in dis money," she explained. "How are you going to spend it, Mandy?"

"Ah is gwine buy me a phoneygraf, an' two silk dresses, an' a dimont ring, an' marry Jack Thompson," Mandy declared happily. "Marry Jack Thompson? Why, Mandy, he is nothing but a worthless loafer, a dressed-up dude who tries to be a 'sport!' " "Yassum, Ah knows dat," Mandy agreed, "but, lack Ah said, Ah wants some luxuries. My ole man was a good nigger, but he sho' was sorry to look at. Now, dis Jack Thompson, he gwine be jest plumb ornamental, settin' round de house all day."

The Roman Coliseum.

The Roman coliseum was the largest and most splendid of the buildings ters, which the Romans invented for exhibiting gladiatorial combats, fights of wild beasts and other spectacles. The repetition of arch beyond arch and story over story gives this amphitheater its imposing grandeur. This principle of reduplication of parts, of which the Gothic architects afterwards made so much use, is carried to a greater extent than in any other Roman building. It did not have a roof. The upper story is not arched like the three lower stories, but solid and with pilasters. Some architects think it was meant wholly for the purpose of supporting and working the great velarium or silk awning that covered the arena during the representation, which may not have been attempted when the amphitheater was first erect-

The Passion for Haste.

A Japanese baron visited the University of California, and on leaving was put aboard a partly filled local

At the junction the party transferred to a much-crowded through car. Japanese courtesy weathered the test so far as manners went, but the baron could not resist the question: "Why did we leave the comfortable car for this one, which is so crowded?"

He was told: "Oh, we save two minutes getting into San Francisco." "Ah, said he, "and what will we do with the two minutes?"

A rather green countryman had just returned from his first visit to New York.

"Well, Si," said the postmaster, "what did you think of the metropo-Us?" "Wat say?" gawked the other, stumped by so big a word.

"I asked how did you ifke the metropolis?" "Oh, that-'twan't open," said Sl."-Boston Transcript.

Crowning Triumph. Little Norman and his two playfellows were boasting about their parents and their belongings. "My father," said Norman, "is going to build a fine house with a steeple on it." "That's nothing!" exclaimed Willie scornfully. "My father has just built a house with a flagpole on it."

Conrad, who had been listening intently, was silent for a moment, then burst out triumphantly: "Oh, that's nothing! My father is going to build a house with a mortgage on it!"
