OREGON'S INDEBTEDNESS

In a recent summary of Oregon's indebtedness compiled by the Secretary of the state for the use of the Taxpayer's league of Portland, the total indebtedness of Oregon is shown to be $107,409,593.94.

County indebtedness, $248,700; school $143,784.94; city $3,631,579.91; port $1,002,000; total $3,226,064.85.

The unsanitary and littered up condition of many of the public camp grounds in Tillamook and at the beaches, where free space and conveniences are provided, is a matter that deserves attention.

"Hell Maria" Dawes, the national budget head, says he can save the nation over a hundred million dollars by the new system during the current fiscal year.

Over in France Monsieur Carpenter is busy explaining that he was not knocked out by Dempsey. Just got too tired to fight and had to lie down to rest.

The mercury has been running up around 86 degrees the past week in the Willamette valley and has started the coast travel in real earnest.

The State Food and Dairy Commissioner has asked County Agent Pine to act as its representative in Tillamook county in the matter of conducting examinations for the state milk and cream tester requirements.

The attention of County Agent Pine recently was called to one Wm. Scott, who was travelling over the county selling "The World's Book."

W. D. Pine, Co. Agriculturist, William Scott a man about 8 years of age, registered special student pharmacy Sept. 1919, continuing through one term only during same term served as part time student laboratory assistant in physics salary $70 per month for actual time of service.

On Scott's promise to refrain from further misrepresentation he was allowed to go on his way.

"DO YOU KNOW COLUMN"

Do you know That Tillamook can grow to perfection more kinds of flowers than any town in the Willamette valley?

lialize in beautiful flower beds along the sidewalks?

That nearly every home owner has a nice lot of flowers, and that the names of the varieties shown would stump most of the men, and tickle a botanist half to death?

That Tillamook gets many verbal bouquets from the visitors on the above account?

That the average Tillamook house cat likes to yowl and fight on moonlight nights like other cats? That some people would throw bootjacks at them if they had the bootjacks? That our grandfathers used to make it hot for the cats with those now discarded boot pullers?

That Tillamook milk has a better flavor than Valley milk? That their lactical fluid has put our cheese on the map, and then some?

That the fire laddies think that trash and rubbish near buildings are a fire menace, and that owners ought to clear up such trash without being officially notified?

That we saw a man walking up the street the other day, and the man stopped to lace his shoe? That when we arrived in front of the man we discovered he was a woman? That our grandmothers would have fainted dead away at the sight of their daughters wearing such mannish garb? That we have evolved some since our grandmothers influenced styles, however, and that the old hoop skirt must have been some lallypoooser itself?

That it pays to advertise? Either that is so, or some of our most successful business men are the biggest fools in the world? The fellow who doesn't advertise nowadays is like the fisherman who forgets to tie a hook to his line? Try Headlight for results. I'll say I'm giving you a straight tip?

That it never pays to peddle gossip, scandal or to knock your competitor or anybody else?

That women are naturally better than men, and that if men were themselves morally better, there wouldn't be so many fool girls in the country?

That is a sad fact that many a good fellow who needs a haircut, hates to kiss a half dollar good bye just for appearance's sake?

That it is reported that a girl from the vicinity of Four Corners chewed gum so fast at the beach the other day that she got the lockjaw, and couldn't talk for several hours? That the family had peace for that length of time without an international agreement?

That the wind blows here on afternoons, and sometimes in the forenoons? That it's a nice little breeze at that?

That the story of a man being chased by a hoop snake upon the Kilchis the other day was all pure fiction? That "there are" no such animals?

Chamber of Commerce, 602 Oregon Bldg., Portland, Ore., July 25, '21 Fred C. Baker, Tillamook, Ore.

Dear Sir: Doubtless our Mrs. Forney, of the Publicity Dept. will acknowledge the receipt of the splendid pamphlet of Tillamook county just received from you; but as they finally come to me for distribution I feel like saying a word in regard to them.

First, I will congratulate you upon the clear comprehensive matter contained in them; and bespeak much benefit to accrue to your part of the state through their circulation.

I was one of what might be called the "second edition" of Pioneers into the Tillamook country in the late seventies, but before there were either roads or bridges north of what is now Tillamook City, then known as Hoquarton.

Having homesteaded and lived there over twenty years, during which time, as Assessor, doing my own field work, and as one of the enumerators of the census of 1900, I became quite familiar with the territory, and an illustrated special edition of the Headlight, published during its early years, contains an article of mine, prophesying much that has since come to pass; but nothing comparable to the present position and prosperity of the county.

I knew Joe Champion, Tillamook's first white man; also the hollow spruce tree, his first domicile, which stood upon what is now the Russell Hawkins place, on Kilchis Point.

I, too could tell some bear stories but for fear of not being believed will refrain. I think all early settlers of Tillamook became acquainted with Bruin, one way or another.

Col. A. W. Miller and myself gave Tillamook her first paper, which was all manuscript—unfortunately destroyed by fire. It was called the "Kilchis Tatler," and was published semi-monthly at Idaville, then called Jawbone. These papers would make most interesting reading now, as they would not only furnish a history of the county at that time, but also an earlier one, written for the paper by the late Warren N. Vaughn one of Tillamook's first settlers, whose descendants are well represented there yet, there having been sixteen children in the family.

I shall always have a warm place in my heart for old Tillamook, where I spent so many years and where a few old friends still are left, and at the time of which I speak was a veritable hunters and fisherman's paradise. May its present prosperity remain and continue to grow.

Sincerely yours, CHAS. B. F. FYE.

Pat Smith of Beaver, was in the city Tuesday while here he met his old friend Tom Rogers of McMinnville, who with his wife, are spending a week or so at Netarta, Rogers is the author of "Nehalem," the well known story about the hidden Spanish treasure on Neah-kah-nie mountain, and Mr. Smith, under another name, figures in the story.

Mr. Smith is one of the men who believes that the Indian story of the hidden treasure chest, is not a myth, and he has devoted part of each year for seven years past in searching for the location. In his excavations he has found stones curiously marked with signs and numerals, which appear to be of Spanish origin. He has also come to the conclusion that the white men who hid the treasure, did so with much care, taking every known precaution to baffle those who might later on seek for it. This himself seventy years of age, this old pioneer has not abandoned hope of finding the iron chest which the Indians declare was buried in a gulch on the side of Neah-kah-nie he states, good progress in the direction of its recovery, and he is hopeful.

Pat Smith, by the way, is one of Tillamook's earliest pioneers, coming with his people into the Tillamook country in 1854, when there were but half a dozen families and about as many unmarried men in the valley. He early learned to speak the Hudson Bay jargon fluently, and in that way learned many of the old Indian traditions from the Tillamooks who to a considerable number then inhabited this section. He is yet hale and hearty and has never felt any inclination to leave the beautiful valley in which his days up to date have been spent.

THE PRINTED WORD

Supposing, that in a certain print shop, a printer were taking a dab of ink and some paper, and, by putting them together with impression, he made $1000 certificates.

Supposing, also, that he made a mistake and used the wrong combination some time; then the same material which formed the valuable certificate would not be worth a cent.

It is the same with your advertising. If the printer does not use his ability to the utmost in combining type, ink and paper your efforts at advertising will result in failure.

The HEADLIGHT, in making up your ad, visions the result of the proper combination of materials instead of the mere use of ink and paper.
