When Susan kissed the beach goodby

When Susan kissed the beach goodby and took the stage for home, There were teardrops on her eyelids, as her orbs did backward roam;

And she carried in her hands, galore, a bouquet of our flowers, That were nurtured by our sunshine and the kindly summer showers.

"Adieu," said she, on looking back, "Adieu, O, lovely beach! Had I the wings of snow-bird, your sandy dwells I'd reach!"

Her grip was full of mosses, and her trunk with smelly shell, And she blubbered something awful when she bade our coast farewell.
