The address of Capt. F. B. Ebbert, associate counsel Anti Saloon League of America in this city last week one night furnished some side lights on the great fight between the opposing forces of prohibition and the liquor advocates, that do not appear in the big dailies to a noticeable extent.

Capt. Ebbert is a veteran of the World war, serving in the chemical warfare service, and is a lawyer of skill and experience. He served as general counsel for the Anti-Saloon league for eight years, and is of the opinion that the great fight has just begun. According to his statements millions of dollars and some of the best legal talent in the country are working to nullify the 18th amendment, and re-instate the saloon.

The old brewing interests are back of the saloon fight with large sums, and a paid lobby hangs about congress seeking for advantages in legislation that will cripple the amendment.

But while the saloon interests for mery had the league to contend with, they now have the government to reckon with, and from the speaker's statements, violators of the law are to be severely dealt with. In addition to heavy fines, the government will also confiscate the bootleggers autos and trucks, and if they have property, that too, can be seized to pay fines, so that he who embarks in the business of making and selling liquor, will have a rocky road to travel.

In addition to the government penalties, the bootlegger will have the state law to reckon with, including its fines and terms of imprisonment. The violator of the law should seriously ask himself the question: "Will it pay to be a bootlegger?"

HARNA'S STORY OF THE BIG FIRE IN 1845

Peter Belleque, who used to live at Woods in this county, 25 years ago, told the writer that Harna, chief of the Nestuccas, who died on the Grand Ronde Indian reservation some time ago, once visited Woods after he had been taken to the reservation, and looked over his old hunting grounds, pointing out places where he used to camp and fish in the days when there were no white men in the country.

Belleque was a French-Canadian and was born on French Prairie. His father was a servant of the Hudson Bay company and the son could talk jargon fluently. The latter had several talks with Harna, on the occasion of his visit, and one day asked him about the fire which had destroyed so much timber along the Big Nestucca. Harna, who was then an old man, related that when the fire was living up the river about where Cloverdale now is, and that there had been much smoke in the air for some time, which made the Indians uneasy. One night the sky was illuminated by a bright light which shone on the mountains to the south east, and which gradually increased, until by morning it was plainly visible, coming toward the coast; and as Harna expressed it, "the roar of the wind and the falling of the trees was louder than the surf, when it stormed on the ocean." Before night the fire had appeared on the mountains opposite their camp, and the Indians hastily took their canoes and paddled down the river to where Woods now stands. He described the heat inland as intense, and saw animals running toward the beach—deer, cougars, bear and other animals—all crossing the river in their haste to get away from the oncoming sheets of flame, which jumped from tree to tree, and raced over spaces with the speed of the fastest race horse.

The Nestuccas took refuge on a sand spit between the river and the ocean, and were imprisoned there for some days, when a heavy rain stopped the fire in its mad, onward rush.

When the Indians eventually returned to their old haunts up the river, they found the river banks lined with dead wild animals which had been roasted by the fire. While Indians have but a vague idea of the passing of time by years, Belleque by allocation fixed the time of the fire at about 1845.

Mute evidence of such a fire may be found on the mountain tops along the Big Nestucca, and from the extent of the ruin wrought, the fire must have swept everything before it.

The Nestucca chief also told Belleque that the first white man he ever saw came in a "big stick canoe with wings." He said the men came ashore in a "tenas canoe" and brought cloth and beads and hatchets, which they traded for furs and food. Belleque, who knew many of the Hudson Bay men when a child, believed that the voyager who landed on the Nestucca beach was Joseph Flambois, a servant of the Hudson Bay country, who in one of the company's small schooners traded along the Oregon coast with the Indians for furs, but of course, could not approximate the date, which must, however, have been after the year 1825, when the Hudson Bay company began operations in Oregon.

OBITUARY

ROBERT JOHN WATT

Robert John Watt was born December the 11th, 1882 at Sarnia, Canada. He passed from this life at Tillamook, Sept. 22nd, 1921, aged 38 years, 9 months and 11 days.

He grew to manhood and spent most of his life in Tillamook. He united with the Tillamook Presbyterian church on confession of faith January 12th, 1899. Since which time he has remained a loyal consistent member.

He was joined in marriage to Lois Larsen at Tillamook, on June 16th, 1916.

He leaves to mourn his departure from this life, his devoted wife, his loving father and mother and two sisters: Mrs. W. A. High of Cloverdale and Mrs. R. U. Moore, of Eugene.

Besides his immediate family he leaves several relatives and a host of friends, who mourn his loss.

His life, his character and his religion all spoke for themselves, so that all who knew him loved him for the worth and the nobility of his life and character.

The last three months of his life was spent upon a bed of suffering, but through it all he was always cheerful, patient, kind and hopeful. His faith in Christ was strong and he was ready to go home and be with the Lord evermore. "He being dead yet speaketh." He is now free from all pain and suffering and awaits his loved ones in the City of Gold.

NO TIME TO QUIT

"Instead of curtailing our advertising, we are enlarging it. Instead of standing pat on our stores as they have been, we are refitting, re-arranging, rebuilding and improving them." This is the statement made recently by one of the foremost merchants in one of our large eastern cities, when asked as to his plans regarding the immediate future.

The plan stated above explains why this man IS one of the leading merchants of the United States. The advertising carried by such a concern will run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, but this man realizes the worth of keeping his name before the people and knows that every penny spent on advertising will be returned through increased sales. What this establishment does is an excellent thing for a smaller one to follow after; the results will be the same.

ORDINANCE NO. 417

An ordinance entitled an ordinance to regulate and control awnings, signs and all forms of construction for advertising purposes, or otherwise, which shall extend over the walks of Tillamook City, Oregon, providing a penalty for a violation thereof, and declaring an emergency

Section 1: It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to place, construct, or cause to be placed or constructed, any awning, sign, or other form of advertising which shall extend over any sidewalk within Tillamook City, Oregon, unless the bottom of said awning, sign, or other advertising device shall be at least seven feet above the upper surface of said sidewalk.

Section 2: Provided further that any awning, sign, or other form of advertising device now existing, which shall be less than seven feet above the surface of any sidewalk, is hereby declared to be a nuisance and shall be removed within forty-eight hours after notice being given by the Marshal.

Section 3: Any person violating any provision of this Ordinance, upon conviction thereof before City Recorder, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $50, and in addition thereto shall remove the awning, sign, or other advertising within twenty-four hours, provided further that any person or persons so convicted and failing to pay the fine imposed, shall be imprisoned in the City Jail one day for every $2 of such fine.

Section 4: Whereas certain awnings and advertising devices are now placed in the City of Tillamook so close to the surface of the sidewalk that the same have become a nuisance and endangers citizens attempting to pass along said sidewalks, now therefore an emergency is hereby declared by the Common Council to exist, therefore this Ordinance shall go into full force and effect upon its passage by the Common Council and its approval by the Mayor, Sept. 28, 1921.

EASTERN TROUT WILL NOT STAY IN COAST STREAMS

Mr. Pollock, who has charge of the fish hatchery up on the Trask river, was in the city Sunday, and stated that under the new laws passed by the last legislature, it is the duty of the men at the hatcheries to look after the trout as well as salmon, and he will therefore hatch the latter also at the ponds up the river.

According to Mr. Pollock who has many years experience in hatchery work, the main fish here are the Cut throat trout, which when grown have the distinctive red mark back of the gills. They do not get this mark until grown. He said that the Eastern Black trout and other kinds had been turned loose in the Oregon coast streams in times past, but that they did not stay. As soon as they were old enough to travel they invariably disappeared and did not return.

The reason given is that they are a high altitude fish, and do not thrive in the warm coast streams, preferring the streams of the higher altitudes, where the water is colder the year around.

Mr. Pollock states that there has been considerable inquiry into the cause of the death of so many salmon in recent years in the coast streams, but that persons differ. He attributes it to the brackish waters of the rivers, the salmon coming in from the cold water of the ocean and being too much affected by the sudden change in temperature.
