ELECTRICITY ON THE FARM

Said Jonas Gray to Amos Hobbs, "I'd like to live in town, there's always somethin' doin' there as every day goes round, there's comfort there in endless ways for common folks an' rich—why! all you have to do in town is just to snap a switch an' light turns on an' heat an' power, y'u needn't stir yer legs—right on the breakfast table y'u can toast or bile yer eggs and if you'd want to grind or churn, it wouldn't matter which, you'd do that chore fer copper cents by turnin' on a switch. But out here in the country its a very different song startin' fires on cold mornin's when the wind is blowin' strong! If y'u hesitate a little an' fail to mave yer pegs y'u'll git cramps all through yer gizzard an' chilblains in yer legs. I wish some of the 'lectric folks would git the notion soon to string a wire 'long this road—it sure would be a boon—I'd have a light in every room an' power for the shores an' 'lectric servants for the wife to do the work indoors. Why don't they come along with wires, poles an' paint an' put the juice to workin' out here where any ain't?" Said 'Amos Hobbs to Jnas Grey, "Indeed that would be fine, but it takes a wad of money to construct a 'lectric line and buy the big machinery that brews electric juice and shoots the current down the road like water down a sluice. I think that we will get it when we farmers are content to let the men who build the line make just a copper cent on the dollar that's invested to make the dream come true—I'll pledge myself to take that stand, now Grey its up to you!"
