MARY MARIE

By Eleanor H. Porter

Illustrations by R. H. Livingstone

SYNOPSIS

PREFACE-'Mary Marie' explains her arent "double personality" and just y she is a "cross-current and a contra-ion;" she also tells her reasons for ting the diary—later to be a novel. The y is commenced at Andersonville.

CHAPTER I.—Mary begins with Nurse Carah's account of her (Mary's) birth, which seemingly interested her father, who is a famous astronomer, less than a new star which was discovered the same night. Her name is a compromise, her mother wanted to call her viola and her father insisting on Abigail Jane. The child quickly learned that her home was in some way different from those of her small friends, and was puzzled thereat. Nurse Sarah tells her of her mother's arrival at Andersonville as a bride and how astonished they all were at the sight of the dainty eighteen-year old girl whom the sedate professor had chosen for a wife.

CHAPTER II.—Continuing her story, Murse Sarah makes it plain why the bousehold seemed a strange one to the child and howher father and mother drifted apart through misunderstanding, each too proud to in any way attempt to smooth over the situation.

CHAPTER III.—Mary tells of the time spent "out west" where the "perfectly all right and genteel and respectable" livorce was being arranged for, and her gother's (to her) unacountable behavior. By the court's decree the child is to spend six months of the year with her mother and six months with her father. Boston a Mother's home, and she and Mary save Andersonville for that city to spend the first six months.

to be Mary, and so I try to refer the for Andersonville.

CRAFTER V.—As Andersonville Aunt Jane meets her at the station. Her father is away somewhere, studying an eclipse of the moon. Marie—Mary' sow—instinctively compares Aunt Jane, prim and severe, with her beautiful, dainty pother, much to the former's disadvantage. Aunt Jane disapproves of the dainty olothes which the child is wearing, and replaces them with "serviceable" serges and thick-coled shoes. Her father arrives home and seems surprised to see her. The child soon begins to notice that the girls at school seem to avoid her. Her father appears interested in the life Mrs. Anderson leads at Boston and asks many questions in a queer manner which puzzles Mary. She finds out that her con account of her parents being divorced, and she refuses to attend school. Angry at first, Mr. Anderson, when he learns the reason for her determination, decides that she need not go. He will hear her lessons. In Aunt Jane sand her father's absence Mary dresses in the pretty clothes she brought from Boston and plays the liveliest tunes she knows, on the little-used plano. Then, overcome by her lone-someness, she indulges in a crying spell which her father's unexpected appearance interrupts. She sobs out the story of her unhappiness, and in a clumsy way he comforts her. After that he appears to desire to make her stay more pleasant. Her mother writes asking that Mary be allowed to come to Boston for the beginning of the school term, and Mr. Anderson consents, though from an expression he lefs fall Mary believes he is sorry she second.

away. And she wrote right back and wanted to know everything-everything I could tell her; all the little things. And she was so interested in Cousin Grace, and wanted to know all about her; said she never heard of her sin, and how old she was, and was she pretty, and was Father around the house more now, and did I see a lot of him? She thought from something ber; but they were all unmistakable, I said that I did.

I could tell her more now, of course, blind as a bat before, than I could in that first letter. I've been here a whole week, and, of all about it-the signs and symptoms, course, I know more about things, and I mean, and how different and thawedhave done more.

caught the fever and died there. So sin Grace. And nowthis Mrs. Whitpey isn't really any relation of his at all. But he'd always known her, even before she married his cousin; and so, when her husband fled, and she didn't have any home,

I don't know why Aunt Jane went away, but she's been gone 'most four nonths now, they say here. Nellie told me. Nellie is the maid-I meen hired girl-here now. (I will keep forgetting that I'm Mary now and must use the Mary words here.)

I told Mother that she (Cousin Grace) was quite old, but not so old as Aunt Jane. And she is pretty, and everybody loves her. I think even Father likes to have her around better than he did his own sister Jane, for he sometimes stays around quite a lot now-after meals, and in the evening, I mean. And that's what I told Mother. Of course, he still likes his stars the best of anything, but not quite as well as he used to, maybe-not to give all his time to them.

I forgot to say that Father is going to let me go back to school again this year ahead of his time, just as he did last year. So you see, really, I'm here only a little bit of a while, as it is now, and it's no wonder I keep forgetting I am Mary.

ONE WEEK LATER

Things are awfully funny here this time. I wonder if it's all Cousin Grace that makes it so. Anyhow, she's just as different as different can be from Aunt Jane. And things are different, everywhere.

Why, I forget half the time that I'm Mary. Honestly, I do. I try to be Mary. I try to move quietly, speak gently, and laugh softly, just as Mother told me to. But before I know it I'm acting natural again-just like Marie, you know.

And I believe it is Cousin Grace. She never looks at you in Aunt Jane's I'm-amazed-at-you way. And she laughs herself a lot, and sings and plays, too -real pretty lively things; not just hymn tunes. And the house is different. There are four geraniums in the dining room window, and the parlor is open every day. The wax flowers are there, but the hair wreath and the coffin plate are gone. Cousin Grace doesn't dress like Aunt Jane, either. She wears pretty white and blue dresses, and ner hair is curly and I think all this is why I keep forgetting to be Mary. But, of course, understand that Father expects me to be Mary, and so I try to remember.

I understand it all now-everything: why the house is different, and Father, and everything. And it is Cousin Grace, and it is a love story.

Now I guess I shall have something

Father is in love with her.

It seems funny now that I didn't think of it at first. But I didn't-not until I heard Nellie and her beau talking about it. Nellie said she wasn't going to get married. And when he asked her what she meant, she said it was Dr. Anderson and Mrs. Whitney. That anybody could see it that wasn't

My, but wasn't I excited? I just guesss I was. And, of course, I saw that I had been blind as a bat. But I began to open my eyes after that, and watch-not disagreeably, you know, but just glad and interested.

That Father stayed in the house a lot more than he used to.

That he smiled more.

That he actually asked Cousin Grace and me to play for him several times. That he went with us to the Sunday school picnic. (I never saw Father at before, and was she Father's own cou- a picnic before, and I don't believe he ever saw himself at one.)

That-oh. I don't know, but a whole lot of little things that I can't rememvery unmistakable. And I wondered, I've just been writing her again, and when I saw it all, that I had been as

When I wrote Mother I told her out Father was; and I asked if she I told her that Cousin Grace wasn't didn't think it was so, too. But she really Father's cousin at all, so it didn't answer that part. She didn't write much, anyway. It was an aw fully snippy letter; but she sald she had a headache and didn't feel at all well. So that was the reason, probably, why she didn't say more-about Father's love affair, I mean. She only said she was glad, the was sure, if Father had found an estimable woman to make a home for him, and she hoped they'd be happy. Then she went on talking about some thing else. And she didn't write much nore, anyway, about anything.

AUGUST

Well, of all the topsy-turvy worlds, this is the topsy-turviest, I am sure. What do they want me to do, and which do they want me to be? Oh, I wish I was just a plain Susie or Bessie, and not a cross-current and a contradiction, with a father that wants me to be one thing and a mother that wants me to be another! It was bad nough before, when Father wanted ne to be Mary, and Mother wanted me to be Marie. But now-Well, to begin at the beginning. It's all over-the love story, I mean, and I know now why it's been so hard for me to remember to be Mary and why everything is different, and all.

They don't want me to be Mary. They want me to be Marie.

And now I don't know what to think. If Mother's going to want me te be Mary. and Father's going to wasn't any wonder she hadn't ever want me to be Marie, how am I going could go as Mary, and be Mary when Then, all of a sudden, at times, he'd heard of her. She was the wife of to know what anybody wants, ever? Aunt Jane first saw me get off the get right up in the middle of some-Father's third cousin who went to Besides, it was getting to be such a train. South America six years ago and beautiful love story-Father and Con-for something-Cousin Grace, I mean came as Mary." Then, after a minute. And so that's why I say he's been

ly. But I hadn't anywhere near said left alone again, after a mint what I wanted to when he did stop It was most dark on the pass me. Why, he almost jumped out of I could see Father's face in the light world are you talking about?"

you're married and-"

"Married!" he interrupted again. (They never let me interrupt like

"To Cousin Grace-yes, But Father, you—you are going to marry Cousin Grace, aren't you?" I cried—and I did most cry, for I saw by his face that he was not.

"That is not my present intention." he said. His lips came together hard, and he looked over his shoulder to see If Cousin Grace was coming back. "But you're going to some time," I begged him.

"I do not expect to."

I fell back in my chair, and I know looked grieved and hurt and disappointed, as I almost sobbed: "Oh, Father, and when I thought you were going to!" "There, there, child! He spoke, stern and almost cross now. "This absurd nonsensical idea has gone quite far enough. Let us think no more "It isn't absurd and nonsensical!" I cried. And I could hardly say the words, I was choking up so. "Everybody said you were going to, and I wrote Mother so; and-" "You wrote that to your mother?" He did jump from his chair this time. "Yes; and she was glad."

"Oh, she was!" He sat down sort of limp-like and queer. "Yes. She said she was glad you'd found an estimable woman to make a "Oh, she did." He said this, too, in that queer, funny, quiet kind of way. "Yes." I spoke, decided and firm. I'd maybe he didn't appreciate Mother as much as she did him; and I determfued right then and there to make him, if I could. When I remember all the lovely things she'd said about

"Father," I began; and I spoke this time, even more decided and firm, "I don't believe you appreciate Mother." "Eh, What?"

He made me jump this time, he turned around with such a jerk, and already, when you came," he finished. spoke so sharply. But in spite of the jump I still held on to my subject, firm and decided,

I say I don't believe you appreciate my mother. You acted right now as if you didn't believe she meant it when I told you she was glad you had found an estimable woman to make a home for you. But she did mean it. I know, because she said it before, once, last one. Yes, and that isn't all. There's another reason why I know Mother please you." "She did what?" Once more he made spoke with such a short, sharp snap. But in spite of the jump I went right on, just as I had before, firm and decided. I told him everything-all about the cooking lessons, and the astronomy book we read an hour every day, and the pink silk dress I couldn't have, and the self-discipline. And how she said if she'd had self-discipline when she was a girl, her life would have been very different.

I talked very fast and hurriedly. I was afraid he'd interrupt, and I wanted to get in all I could before he did. But he didn't interrupt at all. He would last-baving him out there then to see Cousin Grace, and Father Cousin Grace. And I've had a beautiith us, and all that. And I told him told her to go right into the library ful time.

from the window; and it tooked-well, BOSTON. FOUR DAYS LATER. "Why, Father, I was telling you," I on it for years had dropped off and explained. And I tried to be so cool left it clear where before it had been and calm that it would make him calm blurred and indistinct. No, that and cool, too. (But it didn't calm him doesn't exactly describe it either. I I was glad to see them. But I didn't say what he said. After Mrs, Small had gone into the house, and he saw that she was sitting down with Cousin Grace in the library, he turned to me and said:

"And so you came as Mary?" I said yes, I did. "Well, I-I got ready for Marie." But then I didn't quite understand, not even when I looked at him and saw the old understanding twinkle in

"You mean-you thought I was coming as Marie, of course," I said then. him this year than last; and he said "Yes." he nedded

"But I came as Mary." you've told me your story, so I suppose I may as well tell you mine-now. You see, I not only got ready for and Mother sending Mary. And he Marie, but I had planned to keep her laughed and looked queer-sort of half Marie, and not let her be Mary-at the parlor when I cried and he saw then how hard it was for me to live told me how sorry he was to have me here, with him so absorbed in his go. work and Aunt Jane so stern in her black dress. And he said I put it very vividly when I talked about being Marie in Boston, and Mary here, and things-and people-till they were he saw just how it was. And so he gone. And I wondered if, by the thought and thought about it all winter, and wondered what he could do. And after a time it came to him-he'd let me be Marie here; that is, he'd try to make it so I could be Marie. And he was just wondering how he was going to get Aunt Jane to help him when she was sent for and asked to go to an old friend who was sick. And he told her to go, by all means to I'd never know how glad he was that begun to think, all of a sudden, that | go. Then he got Cousin Grace to come here. He said he knew Cousin Grace, and he was sure she would know how to help him to let me stay Marie. So he talked it over with her-how they would let me laugh, and sing and play the piano all I wanted to, and wear the clothes I brought with me, and be just as near as I could be the way felt so sorry for him. I was in Boston.

"And to think after all my preparation for Marie, you should be Mary Father had covered his eyes with his hand, as if thinking and thinking, just as hard as he could. And I suppose it did seem queer to him, that he should be trying to make me Marie, and all the while Mother was trying to make me Mary, And it seemed so to me, as I began to think it over.

"And so your mother-did that." Father muttered; and there was the year, that she hoped you would find queer little catch in his breath again. He didn't say any more, not a single word. And after a minute he got up always has-has your best interest at and went into the house. But he heart. She-she tried to make me over | didn't go into the library where Mrs. into Mary before I came, so as to Small and Cousin Grace were talking. He went straight upstairs to his own room and shut the door. I heard it. me jump, he turned so suddenly, and And he was still there when I went up to bed afterward. How do you suppose Mother's going to feel when I tell her that after all her pains Father didn't like it at all. He wanted me to be Marie. It's a shame, after all the pains she took. But I won't write it to her, anyway. Maybe I won't have to tell her, unless she asks me.

But I know it. And, pray, what am I to do? Of course, I can act like Marie here all right, if that is what folks want. But I can't wear Marie, for I haven't a single Marie thing here. They're all Mary. That's all I brought, Oh, dear suz me! Why couldn't Father and Mother have been just the common live-happy-ever-after kind, or else found out before they married that they were unlikes?

SEPTEMBER

Well, vacation is over, and I go back to Boston tomorrow. It's been very nice and I've had a good time, in spite of being so mixed up as to whether I was Mary or Marie. It wasn't so bad as I was afraid it would be. Very soon after Father and I had that talk on the plazza, Cousin Grace took me down to the store and bought me two new white dresses, and the dearest little pair of shoes I ever saw. She said Father wanted me to have them.

And that's all-every single word that's been said about that Mary-and-Marie business. And even that didn't really say anything-not by name. And Cousin Grace never mentioned it again. And Father never mentioned It at all. Not a word.

Father's been queer. He's been awfully queer. Some days he's talked a lot with me-asked me questions just as he used to, all about what I did in Boston, and Mother, and the people that came there to see her, and everything. And he spoke of the violinist again, and, of course this time I told him all about him, and that he didn't come any more, nor Mr. Easterbrook, either; and Father was so interested! Why, it seemed sometimes as if he just couldn't hear enough about things.

hand and turned around and stared at sentence so he could go. And he did

CHAPTER VIII

Which is the Real Love Story.

Well, here I am again in Boston Mother and the rest met me at the station, and everybody seemed glad to see me, just as they did before, And or cool him one bit.) "It's about when can't describe it. But I'll go on and feel anywhere near so excited, and sort of crazy, as I did last year. tried to, but I couldn't. I don't know why. Maybe it was because I'd been Marie all summer, anyway, so I wasn't so crazy to be Marie now, not needing any rest from being Mary. Maybe it was 'cause I sort of hated to leave

> Father. And I did hate to leave him, especially when I found he hated to have me leave him. And he did. He told me so at the junction. He asked me had I been a little happier there with he hoped I had.

And I told him, of course I had; "I see now that you did. Well, Mary, that it had been perfectly beautiful there, even if there had been such a mix-up of him getting ready for Marie, glad and half sorry; and said he shouldn't worry about that. Then the And then he told me. He told me train came, and we got on and rode now he'd never forgotten that day in down to the junction. And there, while we were waiting for the other train, he

He said I would never know how he missed me after I went last year. He said you never knew how you missed way he said it, he wasn't thinking of Mother more than he was of me, and of her going long ago. And I told him I loved him dearly, and I had loved to be with him this summer, and that I'd stay his whole six months with him next year if he wanted me to.

He shook his head at that; but he did look happy and pleased, and said I'd said that, and that he should prize it very highly-the love of his little daughter. He said you never knew how to prize love, either, till you'd lost it; and he said he'd learned his lesson, and learned it well. I knew then, of course, that he was thinking of Mother and the long ago. And I

"But I'll stay-I'll stay the whole six months next year!" I cried again. But again he shook his head.

"No, no, my dear; I thank you, and I'd love to have you; but it is much better for you that you stay in Boston you to do it. It'll just make the three months I do have you all the dearer, because of the long nine months that I do not," he went on very cheerfully and briskly; "and don't look so solemn and long-faced. You're not to blamefor this wretched situation."

The train came then," and he put me on board, and he kissed me againbut I was expecting it this time, of

The Train Came Then, and He Put Me on Board, and He Kissed Me Again-But I Was Expecting It This Time,

course. Then I whizzed off, and he was left standing all alone on the platform. And I felt so sorry for him; and all the way down to Boston I kept thinking of him-what he said, and how he looked, and how fine and splendid and any-woman-would-be-proud-ofhim he was as he stood on the platform waving good-by.

And so I guess I was still thinking of him and being sorry for him when I got to Boston. That's why I couldn't be so crazy and hijariously glad when the folks met me, I suspect. Some way, all of a sudden, I found myself wishing he could be there, too.

Of course, I know that that was bad and wicked and unkind to Mother. and she'd feel so grieved not to have me satisfied with her. And I wouldn't bare told her of it for the world. So

Purest, Richest Cream from Healthy Cows

FRESH FRUIT JUICES-BLENDED AND FROZEN

60c Per

FORM the most delicious ice cream delight in the world. Don't mistake our WEATHERLY with ordinary kinds.

Children and old folks, too, can eat all they want of it. It's a food-in addition to "tasting nice."

Phone us your order today. Quick delivery made for special occasions

THE BUNGALOW CAFE

When The Tinker Came Along

Remember when you used to watch the "tinker man" mend the holes in your mother's pans? Solder was the metal used-and solder is a product of lead.

Countless other products of lead add to the comfort and convenience of your daily life. In your automobile, for instance, there is lead in the battery, bearings, glass of the headlight lenses, the rubber tires, the paint, and in the rubber mat on the step.

But more important than all these is the use of whitelead as the principal factor in good paint. The more white-lead any paint contains, the greater its protective power and its durability.

We, therefore, use straight "lead-and-oil" paint, made of the well-known "tried and true"

Dutch Boy White-Lead and pure linseed oil-for both interior and exterior work. Any color desired obtainable.

Now is an ideal time to have that interior or exterior job done—"Save the Surface and You Save All." Let us estimate on your work—no obligation incurred.

C. L. LEWIS

Mutual Phone

Tillamook, Ore.

Our classified ads bring results