BURIED ANOTHER FOR CONVICT SON

Mother Buries Body of Man Killed in Railroad Accident as That of Her Boy.

IT'S STRANGE, WEIRD STORY

After Five Years in Prison Son Writes sine die at noon Sunday. to His Mother Under Assumed Name, Inquiring About Her Son.

Birmingham, Ala. - Buried in the little family lot of a cemetery near Gadsden, Ala., and grieved as dead by a sorrowing mother for five years, Clarence Peters turned up alive in the state prison. It's a strange story, weird in detail, but altogether true.

In 1917 Peters, alias Jim Holloway, was arrested in Morgan county as a member of a gang of thieves operating in Decatur. Two comrades were captured, while five others escaped. Peters refused to squeal on his pals and took a fifteen-year sentence, while the others went free. Peters, still known only by the name of Holloway, began his prison sentence while under twenty. In 1918 he escaped from mother's home in Gadsden several weeks before leaving for the West. His mother and brothers never knew he was going under the name of Hol-

Never Knew of Return.

A short while after he escaped from prison he was captured in a western state and sent to Alabama, where prison bars awaited him, but his relatives at Gadsden never knew of his return. In the latter part of 1919 a message was received from a small town in Iowa by Mrs. Peters, Clarence's mother, that a young man answering her son's description had been killed in a railroad wreck, and that letters taken from his pockets bore the name of "Clarence Peters, Gadsden, Ala."

The body was sent to Mrs. Peters and grieved over by the mother and sons. The head and face were so badly mutilated that close identification was impossible, though the size of the body and color of the hair filled the description of Clarence. A tombstone purchased by the family was placed at the head of the grave, but Clarence, ignorant of the cruel joke, served on in the penitentiary. He refused to convey news of his recapture to his mother, and the incident was forgotten in Gadsden.

Wrote His Mother.

In 1922 Peters could no longer refrain from writing home, and under the name of Jim Holloway wrote his mother inquiring of her son's whereabouts and feigning friendship with young Peters.

His mother, a deeply religio an, wrote, thanking him for the interest manifested in her son, telling him of her son's tragic death and urging him to take the warning and live an upright life. The tender words of the sorrowing mother so touched young Peters and so overwhelmed him with surprise over his supposed death that he immediately wrote the whole truth to his mother and Mrs. Peters was soon clasping her son to her bosom behind the prison bars.

During the last few hours of the session President Harding signed the farm credits bill and 98 other measures. No legislation was vetoed.

The last bill to become law was the "better butter" measure, changing butterfat standards. An important measure placed on the statute books at the last moment was the one providing for return to enemy alien owners of all seized property worth $10,000 or less. The farm credits bill was one of the last measures to be enacted by the 67th congress, and rushed to the White House after final senate action, where the president affixed his signature before going to the capitol to sign the flood of last-minute bills.

The measure was fostered by the farm bloc and contains the principal the state prison and stayed at his provisions of the Capper-Lenroot-And-

For months there has been rumors that Mayor Thompson's administration in the city hall would be put under fire by State Attorney-General Brundagee's department, as had been done in the school investigation, in which it was charged that a gigantic conspiracy existed to mulct the schools of more than $1,000,000 and that the schools had been defrauded of more than that amount in questionable business dealings involving many commodities and supplies.
