KEMAL'S BRIDE REFORM LEADER

Mme. Kemal Pasha Makes Her Appearance at Angora in Male Riding Costume.

Angora.—One of the most laudable aims of the nationalist regime in Turkey is to emancipate the Turkish women, who enjoy none of the freedom or privileges accorded other women of the world. The foremost exponents of woman's rights in Turkey are Halilay Edibe Hanum, a graduate of the American Girls' college at Constantinople, and Mme. Kemal Pasha, the pretty nineteen-year-old bride of Mustapha Kemal Pasha.

Halilay Edibe Hanum is already well known in the United States for her work as head of the Angora ministry of education and for her advocacy of more rational customs affecting Moslem women. Two of her sons are students at Ann Arbor, Mich.

But Mme. Kemal Pasha is a new element in Turkish civic and political life. Angora got its first glimpse of the young reformer when she returned from Smyrna with her brilliant husband. Appears in Male Attire.

Her sister Mohammedans lifted their somber veils in amazement as they saw her step from the train dressed as a man, with riding breeches, high boots, spurs and a jaunty outing cap. It was evident that from the moment of her arrival she wished it to be emphasized that Mustapha Kemal Pasha, in his campaign for the emancipation of Turkish women, can count upon the full and active support of his wife.

It is not likely that Turkish women will discard their black skirts and shawls and their impenetrable veils for the unconventional masculine attire of Mme. Kemal, but it is certain that her advent will modify or greatly curtail the restrictions and obsolete customs prescribed for the women of Turkey by Mahomet.

Mme. Kemal insists that the rules of conduct and dress prescribed by the stern founder of the Mohammedan faith centuries ago are not tenable today, and she intends to inject some western customs into Turkish feminine life.

Kept in Seclusion. Before the inception of the nationalist movement Turkish women were kept in the closest seclusion, and were forbidden by their men to visit friends, dance or appear in public. Their literature consisted of a cook book and a Koran. If they ever glanced at a man in public they were roundly chastised by their husbands.

The severest order of nuns could not have led more restrained lives. The Turkish woman was permitted out of her home only when she desired to visit a mosque. Her horizon was limited to the four walls of her home.

But with the growth of the new Turkey all this is changing. Turkish women gradually are being released from their domestic bondage and now and then are getting a glimpse of real life.

They now appear on the streets and in places of entertainment in Constantinople in almost as great numbers as foreign women. The time-honored veil, or yashmak, is disappearing. Turkish girls no longer cast furtive glances at the young men of the capital, but mingle with them freely. And the modern Moslem woman insists that her husband shall have only one wife, instead of three or four as formerly.

USES 30 POUNDS DAILY

Soldier's Minimum Supply, According to World War Data.

Washington.—A million men at the front would consume 80,000,000 pounds a day of food and stores, army statistics indicate. American expeditionary forces' experience indicates that 30 pounds per man per day is the absolute minimum and allows nothing for storing up reserve stocks in the dumps for use in offensives.

The figures came up during recent calculations as to train operating personnel necessary to handle the flow of materials to the front. It was estimated that a single field army would require the movement of 6,000 tons a day of supplies of all kinds, exclusive of concentrations of stores and equipment for a contemplated major operation. In other words, railways to the front for this one army must be prepared to handle 12 trains daily each way.

An army railway battalion is approximately 600 men strong. It includes personnel necessary for the operation of six trains a day, from train crews to right of way and equipment maintenance forces, over one engine division of trackage, or about 100 miles of road.

In a pinch, a battalion might handle nine trains a day, but to be secure in preparing to handle a 12-train schedule behind a field army the experts hold that it would be necessary to put in two railway battalions per 100 miles of road to the front.

With this organization the railway troops for a limited period could handle 18 trains a day. It is estimated, and assuming that the army distance to the front is 300 miles, 30 railway operating battalions would be necessary for a full "six army" emergency.

Under the new plan of building up in the organized reserve, the complete framework of railway operating battalions from the personnel of the existing railway systems, 44 of these units are available. Even in the event that all were called suddenly into service, however, it is believed at the War department that there would be no serious impairment of the operating forces of the railroads, as not more than 5 per cent of the operating personnel would be involved.

The number of railway employees of necessary skill and experience is so great that double the number could be withdrawn, it is estimated, without tying up the roads, particularly under the new plan which allows a reserve battalion to about each 2,000 miles of each system.
