

REJECT FRENCH GOWNS

Germany Forbids Importation Since Occupation of the Ruhr.

Berlin.—Frieda and Gretchen are to have no more Paris gowns. There are to be no more smart little hats brought to Germany from the fashionable millinery shops on the Place Vendôme and the Rue de la Paix.

These articles are not permitted to cross the German boundary since the French occupation of the Ruhr, and the leaders of the German fashion industry have instructed their buyers that French models are not to be bought either directly or indirectly.

High prices in France had prevented German firms from buying many models. Consequently the importations of such finery from France had been inconsiderable as compared to previous times. But Berlin modistes were slowly resuming their Paris trips and buying limited quantities of late creations, when the Ruhr trouble came along and brought the general boycott against articles made in France.

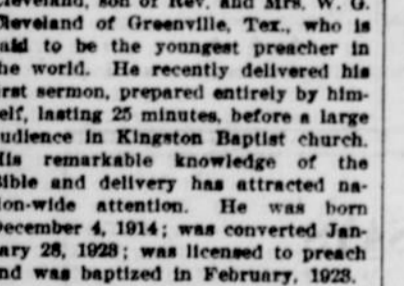

Baron Drecol, managing director of one of Berlin's greatest fashion shops, said that this latest prohibition will make little difference to Berlin designers, as they have not relied directly on Paris for their styles since the beginning of the war and have, to a great extent, become creators of their own models.

"Of course, many of our ideas come from Paris. It is foolish to deny that Paris leads in the creation of modes," declared the baron. "But Germany has learned to develop Parisian suggestions and adapt them. In many cases they are greatly modified, as Parisian designs are often too extreme for our trade. The prohibition against the importation of French goods will affect modistes and milliners only in two lines, silk and flowers. It is difficult to replace certain French silks and flowers."

Vienna and Berlin have been working together in the development of modes since the beginning of the World war. Because of the low exchange they have been successful in developing a considerable trade for model gowns in the Scandinavian countries, the Balkans and central Europe.

American and French fashion magazines have been the source of many ideas for the German and Austrian fashion creators. They also send their representatives to the great watering places on the Riviera and have little difficulty in keeping up with the latest French ideas.

He's Youngest Preacher in World: 8 Years Old

This shows eight-year-old Mayo Cleveland, son of Rev. and Mrs. W. G. Cleveland of Greenville, Tex., who is said to be the youngest preacher in the world. He recently delivered his first sermon, prepared entirely by himself, lasting 25 minutes, before a large audience in Kingston Baptist church.

His Black Hair Turns Red.

Belleville, Ia.—City Health Officer and Fumigator Adam Herr was a dark brunette when he became a city official. Now he is a strawberry blond. His jet black hair has turned a brilliant red. Officer Herr blames the transition on the fumes from a new brand of exceptionally strong formaldehyde he has been using in fumigating houses.

Would Arrest Wife for Non-Support

The usual order was reversed in a police court in Baltimore, Md., when Joe Vazalles, thirty-three, asked a warrant charging his wife with desertion and non-support. He protested that she left him with no one to help care for his son. Magistrate Johnson, however, denied his son for a warrant.

CHIROPRACTIC IS NOT FLATTERED

"One minute essays on health by Dr. H. L. Babb"

Uncle Ben Says: "If you have a joy, Nevvy, share it and you'll double your pleasure in it."

Chiropactic is not flattered because you decide to give it a trial. Chiropactic is not and never has been on trial. Chiropactic is a truth. It needs neither trial nor defense.

If you have a defective alignment of the spine there is certain to be a corresponding weakness in that portion of the body affected by the reduced transmission of life impulses. To make a "trial" of a few adjustments to see what will happen is simply to dally with your health.
