SEEK FOR REASON WHY WOMEN WORK

Labor Bureau Delves Into Problem for Answer to Economic Status of Men.

"The government is trying to find out why women work. Can you give the reason?"

Washington.—Most women work because they need the money. Such is the conclusion reached as a result of a survey made by the women's bureau of the Department of Labor.

The rapidly increasing number of women in industry, in business and in the professions is creating economic problems that are not to be solved off-hand nor dismissed with a gesture. For instance, what will be the effect of this tendency upon marriage, the family and the future of the race? And, again, what will be the ultimate effect of the competition between men and women in similar fields of work and endeavor?

Is it possible that the more women there are who work the more there will be of the succeeding generation who will have to work? Is it all due to the high cost of living, and is the world fast approaching a situation in which it will be impossible for the average man to earn enough or produce enough to support the average family without assistance from those who should be his dependents?

These are some of the questions growing out of the problem that is recognized as sufficiently real and important to call for study by a governmental agency.

War's Influence One Factor.

It is undoubtedly true that the World War contributed largely to the problem and complicated it by forcing women into industrial occupations never before undertaken by them. "The Industrial Code," a recent work on industrial relations, in discussing this says:

"Under stress of national necessity it was found that woman could do almost any kind of work that man can do. Handicaps theretofore accepted as insurmountable were overcome quickly and easily. Was it a question of clothing; hampering skirts, petticoats and the like? Then the impediments were discarded promptly and the overalls of the male workers were adopted. Was it a matter of inferior physical strength? Then inventive genius came forward with a machine, or a method, that minimized the physical demands made upon the worker. Was it a question of environment; of moral and sex hazards to which, under the old order, common acceptance ruled that women should not be subjected? Then society immediately reared around the woman workers a protective wall of sentiment and public opinion that guaranteed them an immunity never before enjoyed by any of their sex.

"It was found that many occupations had been closed to women for no reason other than tradition or custom, and it was also found that women excelled at tasks at which it had been believed only men could be proficient. Contrary to expectations, it was found that standards of productivity in many instances were raised instead of lowered as a result of the introduction of woman workers in industries theretofore reserved to men."

Compete With Men for Jobs.

It was when the man returned from war service and found a woman in his old position that the trouble really began, for the situation immediately obtained of two workers for one job, creating a competition that tended inevitably toward the reduction of wages and salaries. This was a bad situation from the labor standpoint, and the fact that some employers were not slow to take advantage of it made it all the more acute. Many of the women continued at work. Hence the inquiry:

"We all know that the mere fact of so many women at work is an important one," says the statement of the women's bureau, "and one that has much bearing on the organization of our present life. But we cannot get the final significance of this fact until we know why so many women are working."

"Women work because they need the money, not only to support themselves, but for an even more urgent service, to help in the support of their families. This statement may be a surprise to you; it is surprising to many people who for some reason think that many women are at work just for fun or excitement. But it is a true statement, and if you will look around you, you will see that it is true."

In the case of single women who are working the bureau found that an invalid mother or a worn-out father are not uncommon charges for the working woman.

Only about one-fifth of the wage-earning women are married, but that one-fifth is working for the same reason as the other four-fifths—because they need the money.

Kill 500 Horses a Week for Food in Berlin

Washington.—Five hundred horses a week are being slaughtered for food

In Berlin, according to reports to the Commerce department. With the increased scale of prices and added difficulties in food supply which have followed the Ruhr occupation, horse meat sales are said to be increasing rapidly. Horse meat sells now at 2,000 marks per pound, which is roughly equal to about 10 cents in American money.

Big Telescope for Russia.

St. Albans, England.—One of the most wonderful telescopes in the world is nearing completion here for shipment to the Nikolajeff observatory, Russia. It weighs about nine tons, the inside diameter is 45 feet, the refracting telescope for photography is 32 inches, and the whole will be fitted to a revolving turret of steel.

Ancient Temple of the Moon, believed to be the oldest building on earth, is uncovered by scientific diggers at Ur on the lower Euphrates river. It was erected about 7,000 years ago, and was used continuously as a church for 4,000 years.

King Tut seems very ancient to us, yet here's a building that was about 40 centuries old when he was born. Discovery of the Temple of the Moon is important. It helps confirm the scientific belief that the first civilization was along the Euphrates. Somewhere in that vicinity probably was the cradle of the human race—though Chinese claim that their authentic history dates back at least 22,000 years.

Norwegian Preacher Starts Labor Trouble

Bergen, Norway.—The latest "dream preacher" one Marla Akerblom, has been arrested in Finland. The woman caused such a furor among the working classes that the authorities felt forced to take action.

Going from place to place on horseback, with flowing hair, Marla foretold the immediate end of the world. She declared that in view of this to own a house or land, to save money or do any kind of work, was useless. As a result of her preaching all of her
