CONSTITUTION DAY OBSERVED FRIDAY

J. E. Shearer accepted an invitation to address the high school at Bay City last Friday, during Constitution week. Teachers and scholars of the high and public school joined in a good programme, and the speaker talked for half an hour along the lines of Constitution week's work. He emphasized the need of good citizenship, and explained the Constitution and its broad provisions for all who become citizens of this country. He made a plea for a closer study of the grand old document and of American ideals. The school had a fine patriotic program consisting of readings and songs. The meeting closed with the singing of the national anthem, and it was sung with spirit and understanding by the children and the adult audience.

Mrs. George Wesley went out to Portland the latter part of last week, to spend several days visiting with friends and relatives.

ESCAPE FROM SEA DURING WAR IS TOLD

In 1918, Andy Nolan, a Tillamook boy, who had studied navigation, was made third mate of the Du Maru at Portland. The war with Germany was on, and while Andy had not had much deep sea experience, he had a good education, and was theoretically acquainted with modern navigation. While he did not profess to be thoroughly qualified for the position, he was induced by the captain of the Du Maru to go with him as third mate of the vessel, which carried a load of gasoline, loaded torpedoes and high explosives. It was not an inviting mission upon which to ship, but men were scarce at the time, and young Nolan signed for the trip.

The vessel travelled 2,000 miles toward the Philippines, which was her destination, when, during a typhoon some distance from Guam, a bolt of lightning struck the ship and ignited the gasoline. The engineer and firemen deserted the engine room, not stopping to shut down the engine, and the ill-fated vessel steamed on at a fair rate of speed. Obedient to the captain's orders, Andy launched a large ship's boat, and was cut loose by the remaining part of the crew. Three other boats were later launched, and the captain and a few men went last on a raft. Shortly after the departure of the crew the doomed vessel blew up and sank. The fire had reached the explosives.

When he left the ship, young Nolan had the reckoning in his mind, and after cruising about for some time looking for survivors of the explosion, he took reckoning, and with the aid of the boat's compass, set his course for the far distant Philippines, having a definite landing place in view. Then came days of watching and waiting. The men were reduced to a scanty ration of both food and water, and as the boat sailed on, the young Tillamooker had his hands full in settling disputes and keeping a semblance of discipline on board the little craft, which had been rigged with a mast and sails. Daily he took observations of their course, and rigged a log, by which he calculated the distance made as they progressed. To the credit of the first voyage mate, he landed within 30 miles of the place he had figured he would strike land in the Philippine group. Upon landing, they found natives, who took them to a mine operated by a white man, who gave them clothes and provided food, and showed them other kindnesses. Eventually, they were found and conveyed to Manila, where they were well cared for. The captain was saved, having been picked up by a vessel, and later died from the effects of a fall sustained at one of the ports where the ship upon which he found refuge, was docked.

In due time Andy, who is a brother in law of Thos. Coates of this city, returned to Portland, none the worse for his perilous trip, and is now a resident of Portland, and is engaged in the auto tire business. He is a brother of Oak Nolan, now of California; and was a son of John H. Nolan and wife, who were pioneers of this county, and whose homestead of 320 acres, is now owned by Peter Heisel.

Few young men have had a more thrilling adventure than that experienced by Andy Nolan, and it is safe to say that it was an experience that he would not care to repeat.

NO DRUNKNESS SEEN AT LAST COUNTY FAIR

It is said that not a single case of drunkenness was seen at the recent county fair. In past years many cases were noticed, and arrests resulted, principally of non-residents. Many people remarked about the absence of drunkenness and rowdiness, and the fact of its absence at the fair, is a flattering testimonial to the class of people who attended it. While deputies sheriff and plain clothes men were present, not a single arrest was made during the entire fair week.

RUSSELL ARRESTED NOT GAME WARDEN

The fact that a Geo. Russell was fined in the circuit court recently has caused deputy game warden Russell to explain that he is not the man who was fined for operating an automobile while intoxicated. The man who was fined was Dr. Geo. Russell, formerly of Cloverdale, and the similarity of names even to the surname, was confusing. The deputy game warden does not drink moonshine or any other brand, and his old friends all know it, but others might not, hence this item. The whole trouble was occasioned by inadvertently leaving off the guilty man's professional title.

STATE FIELD AUDITOR E. D. SELDER IS HERE

E. D. Selder, field auditor for the state industrial-accident commission, is here looking over the books of the county officers and those of sawmill companies, and various other business men, to ascertain if any thing be due the state in the matter of compensation. Mr. Selder is an accountant and expert, and is said to be quite thorough in his work.

QUARTER OF FINES GOES TO THE STATE

One fourth of all fines received in this county for violations of the prohibition law goes to the state, and is added to a fund to pay men employed by the state in prohibition enforcement. The fines in this county for September will go far beyond those collected for prohibition violations during the previous month. Three fourths of the September fines will go a long way toward paying county expenses.

DEER ARE PLENTIFUL AS EVER, 'TIS SAID

An old timer who still goes out and gets his two deer each season, and who lives up one of the rivers leading down to the bay, stated recently that "deer are as plentiful as when he moved to his place in this county fifteen years ago." He stated that "deer often browse and sleep within half a mile of the ranches, and are safer there than in many of the open places." The country along the Tillamook streams is rocky, brushy, and in many places almost inaccessible to hunters, places where precipices and dense jungles of brush, small trees and the devil's stick conspire to make hunting a heroic undertaking. In such places the doe raises her offspring, and in some open space on a ledge of rock, the buck lies in the sun until his horns are hardened so that he can protect himself from some other pugnacious buck, or risk war with some predatory animal of the panther species. It will be many years before the deer of this region become extinct. There are too many inaccessible hiding places in the mountains and uplands of this county.
