THE STRAWBERRY IS ABOUT GONE

There is a letup in strawberry offerings and prices are firmer and higher. It is not expected that strawberries will again sell at low prices this season, the bulk of the crop having already been picked.

Extremely low sugar prices are being quoted by retailers as a result of continued dropping of values by refining interests. Just when the low point of the season will be reached experts disagree. In fact most of them are today holding high priced sugar they bought when they thought the market was really low.

Raspberries are being offered in a limited way. Within six days the season is expected to be well on.

Banana bargains are being offered by some of the retail shops. The fruit is ripe. Consumers will find the mottled or speckled banana the best. Green to yellow stock is not ripe.

Cherry offerings are increasing and the price is dropping. The better quality varieties are now available.

It will soon be time for currants. A few boxes have already reached the market and are selling at 10 and 15 cents each.
